My right hon. Friend the Minister must address the problem of indebtedness to international financial institutions. Before I deal with that, I congratulate her on the major part that she has played in finding a way round the rigidity of the international financial system as it affected Guyana. The British Government put in over £30 million to repay Guyana's outstanding indebtedness to the World bank and the International Monetary Fund. Canada also provided money and the United States of America provided a minuscule sum. The money went to repay the country's debts and its outstanding interest, and the lending programme at the IMF and World bank was started again. That was a constructive, and a risky move to take in Guyana, but I hope and pray that it will bear fruit in that devastated country.

We cannot apply the solution used in Guyana to many other countries. If we did, a large proportion, if not all, of our aid budget would be absorbed by such gestures. That is why we must persuade the international financial institutions to take a more responsible position on debt. They cannot continue to lend to such countries, particularly for project aid but also for programme aid. If underlying projects fail, the institutions cannot then demand that countries repay their debts in full, with interest, on time. The institutions must take responsibility for their investment programmes. A way must be developed to reschedule debts and probably revolve them so that the money is invested in creative projects to enable the country to earn the foreign exchange it needs eventually to repay its debts.

The current position of the World bank and the IMF is that they will not reschedule or forgive debt. They are resisting change in that position. The IMF has lent money from special funds to countries in sub-Saharan Africa over inappropriately short periods. The period is now seven years, which is a great advance on three years but it is still not sufficient to enable the countries to restructure.

The IMF is now demanding repayment. The only way in which that can be done is through the grant window of the International Development Association, but that money should not be used for that purpose. It should be used for constructive and badly needed social projects such as housing, population control and health programmes. Repayment of debts is the wrong use of the IDA money, although I welcome the new IDA 9 settlement, which shows an increase over IDA 8. Nonetheless the settlement is far short of what is needed, particularly if it is to be used as a fund to repay international financial institutions.

I now turn to aid quality. I congratulate my right hon. Friend on the excellent programme that she has initiated and supported in South Africa to assist the black population. She boosted the programme enormously in 1986. The budget has reached a total of £8 million, £4 million of which is spent directly on African education, which badly needs further support not only from Britain but from the international community if South Africa is to make the transition from an apartheid state to one which can run its affairs effectively and well.

Education under the Bantu Education Act is so deplorable that even able people come to universities without the necessary qualifications to enter them. The universities have tried desperately to raise the education of those people to standard university entry level. That effort costs enormous sums of money which the universities do not have. Our contribution to the programme is greatly appreciated, but it needs to be boosted and put on an international footing if we are to obtain sufficient money to help South Africa to catch up with what it should have been doing for many years.

The sensitivity of the programme in South Africa is fascinating. It has generated the most enormous enthusiasm in our embassy and on the part of our most excellent ambassador Sir Robin Renwick. Embassy staff are working hard in the townships producing admittedly tiny schools made out of corrugated iron in shack towns. Nevertheless, they are the first schools in those areas.

Our people are there helping the teachers to organise, teaching them and giving them time off to learn new techniques. They are equipping the schools with toys and learning equipment which otherwise would not be available. There would be no books, pencils, paper or other items of necessary and basic equipment if it were not provided by the British aid programme.

The British aid programme is also working in Alexandria, a most appalling township just outside Johannesburg. We have given money for the construction of houses for old age pensioners who do not have a home. We are supporting a home for old people, the director of which gave each one of the Members of Parliament who visited it, including my right hon. Friend the Member for Guildford (Mr. Howell), a big hug and a kiss on both cheeks.

The programme is immeasurably well received and respected by all who benefit from it. Several people attended a reception to tell us how it needed to be boosted. They spoke with great enthusiasm about the aid programme and told us about the politics of the African National Congress, the Pan-Africanist Congress and the Azanian People's Organisation. As a result, we have a political contact with the black population of South Africa which will prove invaluable in building up the confidence of the whole population in southern Africa and re-establishing proper trade, social and cultural relationships with it.

I should like to see that quality of aid extended to our whole aid programme. We have a problem, in that we have always been wary of being called neo-colonialists. Government aid programmes are rigidly Government to Government. The administration of both British programmes and European development fund programmes run by the directorate general VIII needs to be more flexible. Programmes are dominated far too much by what the host Government believe should be done and too little by what we regard as the priorities in that country. Particularly when we are dealing with Governments which have failed, are corrupt or have "inappropriate economic policies"—in the jargon of the aid programmes—the wisdom of continuing to support such programmes is questionable.

For example, in Zambia we support the education programme, when the Government themselves are not prepared to put money into it. The result is that the whole education programme is spiralling downwards into an unacceptable quality. If the Zambian Government refuse to put their money in but demand that we put our money in, we should say no. We must tell them that they must put their money in. We want to help but we cannot do so if they refuse to put money in and use it instead to build huge party headquarters or headquarters for the Government copper company, while denying it adequate money for investment to enable it to compete with other copper-producing countries worldwide.

We cannot and should not tolerate that kind of distortion. We must rethink our aid programmes so that they are well directed to the poorest people and have aid objectives with which we agree. Obviously, they must be agreed with the host country too, but they should deal with matters about which we are enthusiastic, and they should go in the direction that we think is right.

That requires stopping the administration of the aid programme as it is done at present. The three-year rolling programme is pre-set and inflexible. Each country gets a little bit. A country received so much previously, so it gets the same sum this year, plus a little extra for inflation. That aid framework programme must be revised. We must be able to respond more easily not only to immediate problems, such as hurricanes and famines, but to the changing picture within those countries and our perception of them.

The aid programme must be strongly connected to private enterprise and investment. When private investors go to the aid programme administrator, they must not hear, "Our money is wholly committed for three years. We do not have any. Go away and find somebody else to help with your project." In the past two months, when I was in Southern Africa, I was told that the private sector had nothing to do with the programme of the Overseas Development Administration. That attitude must change.

I am delighted that we are beginning to change the attitude between the ODA and the Commonwealth Development Corporation. As hon. Members will see from publications, when the ODA is asked what the private programme is, it says that it has the CDC. Indeed, it has, and the CDC does excellent work. However, there is competition between the ODA and the CDC for funds from the aid budget. As a result, instead of boosting and developing CDC-ODA programmes, the CDC is starved of the money necessary to do the work. The sum needs to be doubled or trebled. I am surprised that a Government who are as devoted as I am to private enterprise as the engine of growth in third-world countries have not done more.

I am delighted that CDC and ODA representatives are now meeting and beginning to plan joint projects. For example, one would normally expect a forestry project to have roads, telephone systems, electricity and so on. ODA grant money is needed to provide the electricity, housing, roads and infrastructure, and CDC investment is needed for a properly conducted timber project which does not destroy but harvests the forests, and which continues to encourage its redevelopment. I hope that we shall see much more of that sort of combined project, which has just begun.

We must ask the ODA to think about its programmes in relation to private investment. It is only the resumption of private investment which will address the poverty problems. It is only with private investment and private initiative on the part of the inhabitants of the host country and with inward investment from abroad that we shall begin to see the economic development which is vital, if those countries are to recover any economic prosperity and to provide schools, education and health care for women and children. In that way, they can begin to help themselves, which is an objective stated in the ODA's report.

It is vital to get the politics right. In his speech in June to the all-party group on overseas development and the Overseas Development Institute, the Foreign Secretary set a new tone when he said that we cannot go on lending to countries with Governments who are not accountable to the people, where the rule of law does not apply, where there is no freedom of the press and where we are confronted with trade barriers. Those countries must lower their barriers to allow trade, just as we must under the general agreement on tariffs and trade, which we failed to do in December, but which I hope we will succeed in doing in January.

Restrictions on trade, for example in textiles, are incredibly damaging to the ability of those countries to recover and to begin to earn their own living. We must lower our barriers, so that we in turn can ask them to lower their barriers to allow trade to flow, develop and grow. Failure to do so will plunge us into a 1930s-1940s depression. People will not be able to trade with each other and we shall not be able to get the growth which is vital if we are to have any chance of dealing with the increased population, which my right hon. Friend outlined so ably to us.

Although our aid programme is not sufficient and although we may need to adjust its direction and emphasis, it is a most valuable contribution to many countries throughout the world. We should be proud of the increase in real value terms. Let us encourage the Government to increase it further. Let us encourage the Government and the Opposition to be constructive, so that we can be proud of what our country is doing.

Sir David Steel (Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale): It is always a pleasure to follow the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) in these debates. I have always regarded him as one of a small minority of Conservative Members who speak with great knowledge and genuine concern on this subject. In particular, I agree with him about the excellent programme organised by our embassy in South Africa which I have seen. He will agree that some of the structural lessons from it do not apply to conditions other than those in South Africa. Would that they did. However, he is right that there are some lessons to be learnt from the effective nature of that modest but invaluable programme.

Before I turn to the main subject of today's debate, I wish to pick up what the Minister said about the famine in the Horn. There is a sense of public disquiet, nay outrage, that four or five years after the great emotional public response to the famine in Ethiopia, we should again ask people to dip into their pockets. It is not that they are reluctant to do so again, but they are asking what we have done since that great appeal to put right the situation in that and other parts of Africa. I have two suggestions to make to the Government.

First, as the Minister said, civil war exacerbates conditions of famine. That is true not just of Ethiopia, but of Mozambique, Angola and other countries. Those wars would not continue if we could starve the countries of their supply of arms. Now that we have a politically more effective United Nations organisation, it is time to revive the proposal of Hans Dietrich Genscher, the German Foreign Minister, for a United Nations-organised, international arms sales register. We in the west cannot continue to allow our private companies to profit from massive arms sales to all parts of the world and then wring our hands when civil wars continue. I should like the Government as a matter of policy to take action in the United Nations to stop the supply of arms to those areas, so that resources that are wasted on armaments may be put to peaceful uses. The figures are appalling. In the past few years the Governments of developing countries have spent double on arms what they have spent on health and education. We cannot be surprised that tragedies such as that in Ethiopia continue year after year while some people profit from the arms trade. The Government should make that issue a priority in their mission in the United Nations.

I do not know of the experience of other hon. Members, but I am struck by the number of young people in our country who want to find an outlet for their idealism and energy through service in the third world. Although the Government support Voluntary Services Overseas, it is aiming to increase its volunteers to a modest 1,500 next year. We should return to the spirit that was prevalent in the mid-1960s in Britain and America. Then there was a great well of organised support and qualified young people to go out to help the third world. Such voluntary work is cost-effective. People are willing to increase knowledge about the growing of crops, and organise irrigation schemes, engineering works, water supplies, immunisation programmes and family planning programmes. We should do a great deal more to harness the desire of so many people to undertake such voluntary work. Official Government-to-Government programmes are welcome, but voluntary assistance has a great role to play.

This debate is welcome, despite its thin attendance. It is held against the continuing background of the disproportionate allocation of resources and population on the globe. One quarter of the world's population lives in the rich north and we enjoy four fifths of the world's income —three quarters of the world's population lives in the poor south and they are saddled with just one fifth of the world's income.

The Minister gave us the now-familiar figures of projections for population growth. Since 1950 the population has doubled and it is forecast to double again by the middle of next century. The Minister will also be aware, however, of more authoritative and gloomy reports, and I am glad that the hon. Member for Devizes (Sir C. Morrison) devoted his speech to that important topic. He quoted from the report of United Nations Fund for Population Activities, which said:

"The next 10 years will decide the shape of the 21st century. They may decide the future of the earth as a habitation for humans."

If we took those words seriously the Chamber would be full today as we tried to tackle the problem. Unfortunately, the global population explosion and its link to threats to the world environment is far more serious than our people and the general political debate appreciate.

We have already heard that the developing countries have enough problems providing for their current populations, let alone trying to tackle the problems caused by substantially increased ones. The environmental consequences of a failure to tackle the population explosion will result in problems relating to food, fuel, water and land supplies as poorer countries make a desperate attempt to provide for their unacceptably increasing populations.

This country has a responsibility to lead on population and environmental issues. Last year Britain hosted the conference that agreed to phase out all CFC emissions from the European Community by the end of this century. I was disappointed, however, that we did not back the German and Danish Governments who were pressing for earlier targets. We are a little complacent about the scale of the destruction of the ozone layer which we shall allow to continue through the next decade. The fact is that 80 per cent. of greenhouse gases originate in the developed countries and, therefore, the responsibility lies with us to make a greater effort to reduce those emissions.

Just as the new political muscle of the UN should be used to control arms sales, so we should beef up the United Nations Environment Programme to make it the appropriate body to administer an international global climate fund to monitor and enforce CO_2 reductions. It should co-ordinate the necessary international action to achieve that. For that to happen, however, UNEP must be given greater political and financial backing.

I do not want to make a long speech, but I must take issue with the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford who said that we should be proud of our aid budget. When I visit schools I discover that the one thing that is fixed in people's minds is that, many years ago, the UN agreed that we should aim to devote 0·7 per cent. of our gross national product to overseas aid. People may not know much about overseas development, but that target figure is firmly in their minds. During the lifetime of the Government, we have never reached that target. The Select Committee on Foreign Affairs has called on the Government to set a timetable for achieving that target, but it has not materialised; nor have we had an acceptance of that target in principle.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government have always accepted the target in principle. We cannot stipulate a timetable, but we shall work towards it as fast as we reasonably can, taking into account what all the other donors are doing.

Sir David Steel: I withdraw my claim that the Government have not accepted that target in principle, but such acceptance is no good if one looks at the facts. In 1979, when the Government came to office, we were spending 0·5 per cent. of GNP on overseas aid. We were still short of the target, but from then on our contribution went down and down. The lowest contribution to overseas aid came in 1987—after eight years of Conservative Government—when we contributed 0·28 per cent. of GNP to overseas aid. Our contribution has increased a bit since, but it is no good for the Government to say, "Oh, haven't we done a wonderful job of turning the economy round? We are such an effective Government." That means nothing when one considers the pathetic slide in our contributions to overseas aid.

I also understand that we are well below the average European Community contributions. The Minister referred to other donors; she should be aware that EC member states have set varying targets for achieving the 0·7 per cent. contribution. This year, the average contribution from the EC is 0·52 per cent. of GNP—well above our contribution.

I certainly would not say that we should be proud of our overseas aid budget. I hope that the Minister will not take offence, but I am trying to give her greater power in the counsels of the Government. For that reason, and not because of her sex, I wish that she had been admitted to the Cabinet in the recent reshuffle as she might have had even more leverage in getting a more generous contribution from the Treasury.

Mr. Wells: I appreciate the constructive way in which the right hon. Gentleman has approached the argument, but he would agree that it is fair to point out that the statistic based on GNP per head will vary if the GNP goes up quickly. As a result of that a country could be spending more money but spending less on trade and provision. In the interests of fairness it is also worth remembering that the British aid budget is the sixth largest in the world.

Sir David Steel: Yes, but the whole point of the original UN target was to link it to GNP so that as a nation's prosperity increased so did its contribution to the less fortunate. As we are, in relative terms, comfortably off and, as our standard of living has increased in the past decade, it is a shame that we have also watched our contribution to overseas aid decline.

Mr. John Battle (Leeds, West): The point of the GNP figure was to establish a base line. For example, Japan now gives more aid than any other country, although in GNP terms it is lower. Our problem is that we are giving less as a percentage of GNP than other countries which claim that their economies are worse off than ours, and we have had a booming economy for 10 years.

Sir David Steel: The hon. Gentleman is agreeing with my point.

I want, at the same time, to compliment the Government, and I can do that by agreeing with what the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford said about debt. The Government's record on official debt has been good.

The decision to write off £16 billion for 22 or 23 countries has been generous and imaginative, and they are to be congratulated on it.

I now ask the Minister to go further by bringing pressure to bear on the private sector banks. The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford spoke about institutional lending, and I agreed with him. But there is also a great deal of bank debt owed to this and other countries. The banks lent on an irresponsible scale at a time when interest rates were lower than they are now. Many countries which borrowed are in great difficulty now because of the increase in world interest rates and the lack of success of their economies.

Whereas a few years ago when one made this type of suggestion the banks wrung their hands and said, "We must be careful not to set off a banking crisis," they have since set aside, and organised their structural internal funds to cope with, bad debts. Instead of allowing those funds to lie fallow, waiting for bad debts to happen, the Government should, in a dialogue with the banks, urge them to follow the Government's example and write off some of the longstanding debts of the poorest countries.

We have seen a few welcome changes of attitude from the Government since the change of Prime Minister. We note the decision, for example, on compensation to haemophiliacs. There is another change of attitude which I hope the new Prime Minister will introduce, and that is to reverse the disastrous and hasty decision that was made when the Conservatives took office in 1979 to charge increased fees for overseas students. Not only was that policy short-sighted from the point of view of the needs of the developing world, but it was lamentably short-sighted from the point of view of Britain's national interest and influence in the world.

It would not be costly to reverse that decision. I urge the Minister to get back at the Treasury and, in particular, to bite hard on the ear of the new Prime Minister and say, "Here is another gesture which would make a big difference to Britain's standing in the world at relatively little cost." I urge her to take that action.

Mr. George Gardiner (Reigate): I join in the congratulations that have been extended to my right hon. Friend the Minister on her comprehensive speech in introducing the debate and for the diligence that she brings to her office.

The hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) made some disparaging comments about a speech by the Foreign Secretary last June to the Overseas Development Institute in London. I wish at the outset to acknowledge the significant contribution that that speech made to thinking on this subject. To many of us, it came like a fresh breeze across many of the stale old arguments on overseas development aid that we have heard over the years. Indeed, I was glad to detect gusts of that fresh breeze in the Minister's speech today.

The speech of the Foreign Secretary was given under the title, "Prospects for Africa in the 1990s", and it is on the experience of sub-Saharan Africa that I shall dwell today. The countries of that region, many of them Commonwealth countries, have been recipients of heavy British development aid, yet any observation must lead to the conclusion that all that aid has done almost nothing to elevate the economic condition of the ordinary people in those countries. Indeed, often the reverse has been the case.

In the last 20 years, the real per capita income in many sub-Saharan African states has actually dropped. For example, 10 per cent. of Tanzania's entire GNP is made up of overseas aid, yet its economic condition continues to deteriorate.

What has gone wrong? Why has all our development aid over the years not had its intended effect? Could it be that we are supplying it in the wrong way? In his speech to the Overseas Development Institute, the Foreign Secretary drew some comparisons between the experience over the last 30 years of countries in sub-Saharan Africa and many in south-east Asia around the Pacific rim. Many of the countries in both regions, he said, were once ruled by colonial powers. Both had had the advantages and disadvantages of that experience. Many in south-east Asia have fewer natural resources than countries in Africa, yet over those decades the standard of living of those Pacific rim countries has leapt ahead, while in sub-Saharan Africa it has stagnated.

The Foreign Secretary was careful about drawing easy comparisons, yet he put his finger on the essential difference. By and large, those Pacific rim countries have had good government and, just as important, an open economic system developing free market economies. On the other hand, too many in Africa have suffered from bad government, often in dictatorial one-party states, with highly interventionist and collectivist economies.

The hon. Member for Cynon Valley was selective in quoting from the Foreign Secretary's speech. My right hon. Friend also said:

> "Economic success depends to a very large extent on effective and honest government, political pluralism and, I would add, observance of the rule of law, freer and more open economies. These are choices for Africans, not for us to make. But aid donors can help where the will is there by providing assistance and training to strengthen legal, financial and other institutions which help form the fabric of a healthy society."

Today, the Minister gave examples of that.

> "And they should consider potential recipients of aid in the light of certain criteria. Countries which tend towards pluralism, public accountability, respect for the rule of law, human rights, market principles, should be encouraged. Governments which persist with repressive policies, corrupt management, wasteful discredited economic systems should not expect us to support their folly with scarce aid resources which could be used better elsewhere."

He went on to point out that those were precisely the tests that we were now applying in eastern Europe. I believe that that approach should be made a watershed in British development aid policy.

That gives rise to some interesting lines of thought, many of which were developed in a stimulating report issued last month by the United Kingdom branch of the International Freedom Foundation under the title: "Recommendations for the Future Conduct of British Government Aid and Development Policy." I will not ask the Minister today to comment on the report's proposal that the Overseas Development Administration should be disbanded and replaced by a new overseas enterprise agency within the Department of Trade and Industry. I have a sneaking feeling that she would not agree with that suggestion. That is an idea worth pursuing, although perhaps not in the context of the debate.

[Mr. George Gardiner]

I have a couple of thoughts that I shall develop in the light of my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's analysis. The first is perfectly summarised in the report of the International freedom Foundation:

"Traditional aid policy has served to reinforce the dirigiste, highly interventionist, economic policies of many Third World states and has not contributed to the political liberalisation of these societies. By failing to tie the continuation of aid to massive economic and political restructuring, western governments have, in effect, rewarded the pursuit of authoritarian administration in the underdeveloped world. The undemocratic regimes of countries such as Zambia, Tanzania, Uganda, the Seychelles and elsewhere have been given no incentive to change their ways."

That is certainly borne out by my own observations in Zambia, which has not only a one-party constitution, with all the stagnation and wasted talent that goes with it, but an economic system dominated by parastatal organisations, with all their managerial posts entirely within the patronage of the central party organisation. It is small wonder that Zambia has a basket-case economy, with many elements distressingly similar to those experienced within the Soviet Union today.

However much development aid one tips in at the top, it will all be frittered away long before it serves to raise the living standards of ordinary people at the bottom. For years, the excuse has been made of the apartheid regime next door and the armed struggle waged by the African National Congress. But that will not wash any more. The fault for Zambia's economic stagnation lies fair and square within its own political and economic structure.

But at last the light is dawning. Zambians have been promised multi-party elections next year. We welcome that, although we wait to see how fair and free they will be. I submit that all sub-Saharan African countries must be told that, unless pluralistic political systems are instituted and the market system encouraged, they can expect development aid to tail off. What goes for eastern Europe must go for southern Africa too.

The second thought prompted by the speech of my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary is that we should look again at the practice of pouring so much development aid in at the top of the still collectivist economies. Instead, we should direct more to the bottom and help individuals and families in the third-world countries to pull themselves up by their bootstraps. That would mean not going for ambitious infrastructure schemes, although they are often important, but giving individuals the basics to improve their own economic conditions and serve as points of growth in their economies at the grass roots. That policy is the very reverse of collectivism, but experience suggests that it would have a far more potent effect.

The ODA has experience of such a system in several parts of the world, as we heard earlier in the debate. I have seen it at work in South Africa—in the squatter camps around Cape Town, where groups of women have been given sewing machines to develop their own dressmaking businesses. Machines to make wire fencing or building bricks have been given to small co-operatives, which in turn have spawned other small industries around them. Tools have been given to make furniture and sheds to serve as factories. It is from such acorns that third-world economies can grow, but to do so they must have a free, non-collectivist economic environment.

I welcome the remarks of my right hon. Friend the Minister today about the need to involve local people. Often good development policies require direct contact with such people. We should not always rely on what are often inefficient Government agencies in some of the third-world countries.

Many more thoughts flow from the speech of my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary last June. We can only hope that the logic of his diagnosis will be followed through in the Government's future aid policies.

12.15 pm

Mr. John Battle (Leeds, West): We should check what could be described as the looseness with which we use language when discussing policies. When I reflect on the title of the debate, which refers to "progress in assisting economic reform . . . in the developing world",

I challenge the word "progress". Evidence suggests that there has not been much. I also challenge, somewhat controversially, the phrase "developing world". Signs seem to suggest that some countries are developing rapidly, while others are going downhill.

Another phrase that should not be lightly slid over, is "economic reform", which can mean many different things in different contexts. Even within this Government's lifetime the instruments of economic reform change and take on different characters and contents.

This year the World bank produced the "World Development Report 1990", its 13th annual report on world development indicators. What was striking about it was the word "poverty" haunting the cover. It was exactly the same word as haunted the cover of the 1980 report. The 1990 report states:

"The world economy enjoyed moderate growth in the closing year of the decade. But the auspicious picture was not uniform. The industrial countries saw favourable developments in growth, trade and investment. Real per capita incomes grew (and poverty declined) in South Asia and, even more markedly, in East Asia. But in some countries of Latin America and in most of sub-Saharan Africa, real per capita incomes, living standards, and investment have slipped. For the poor in these countries, the 1980s was a lost decade."

The report goes on to spell out that the number of poor people will increase in the years to come, given the present signs of world development.

A similar report was published by the International Labour Office in 1987. It said:

"The world labour situation has deteriorated further since the first two volumes of the World Labour Report were published in 1984 and 1985. Real incomes from work, the principal source of income for most households, have fallen in many countries. The great majority of workers in sub-Saharan Africa and Latin America, both wage workers and the self-employed, have suffered a drop in real income of as much as 30 to 40 per cent. or more since the beginning of the 1980s."

It seems that all the analyses show that people have been getting poorer in the past decade. In recent months we have heard estimates of between 5 million and 10 million people facing starvation in the Sudan and Ethiopia. Only yesterday, we heard that as a result of crop failure in Eritrea and parts of Tigray, 6 million people could face widespread disaster.

The United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation report states:

"With reserve stocks virtually depleted after last year's poor harvest in Eritrea and Tigray, widespread loss of life is inevitable unless further emergency relief and logistic support for its distribution are mobilised."

It is absolutely plain that the international position has been getting demonstrably worse in terms not only of emergency relief and aid, but of the relationship between trade and development. The spiral of world economy is working against, not in favour of, the poor countries.

What is Britain's response? Sadly, I suspect that our reponse to the latest statements of the projected famine in Africa will be that people will wait for the pictures of famine camps to appear on television again. Perhaps we become anaesthetised by television pictures. It is as though we leave to information technology and the mysteries of satellites the ability to make the only connections. We can see what is happening in our front rooms but we are reduced to passive spectators—almost voyeurs of what is happening on the world scene. Our emotions are challenged, but we do not believe that we need to work through our interdependence or to think about the causes of world hunger and poverty. It is as though we are being reduced to passive subjects and if we are subjected to too much we switch it off and hope that the poor will go away.

The result is a lack of analysis of the complex nexus of relations that the modern economy weaves around the world. There is a lack of awareness that small actions and decisions that we make, when compounded, have consequences for millions of other people throughout the world, who suffer or celebrate as a result of what we do.

I have been reminded of a letter written and signed by young people in Latin America:

"The crops in Argentina, the American embargo of wheat to the USSR, the European Common Market, the crop surplus in France, and hunger in India are all part of the same web. A transistor radio made in Korea, which I buy here at a low price, involves the low salary of the workers, the repressive regime in Korea, Japanese economic policies, American capital . . . unemployment in my own country, and problems which will involve my children and grandchildren."

That is why I suggest that aid and trade and activities in other areas of economic policy and commerce must be related to each other when assessing the Government's aid programme.

We are also experiencing a new environmental awareness in an interdependent world. The Minister said that environmental problems know no boundaries, but rather than facing up to the shared responsibilities that we should adopt to the environment, there are some who assume that they should take over those responsibilities. There are even people abroad who claim that the Amazon rain forest belongs to them, and there are others who put the unequal restraints on pollution across boundaries to their own commercial advantage.

I offer an example of this from my constituency. In Armley in Leeds people are dying of a deadly disease known as mesothelioma because they worked in a factory that produced asbestos. When they went home dust was blown out of the factory at night and lay like snow on the streets and on school playgrounds. So people in the neighbourhood contracted the disease. The factory closed in 1956, but years later people are still dying.

After the factory closed in Leeds it was transferred, lock, stock and barrel, to India, where it opened again without the same restrictions and continued to pollute beyond the reach of the controls implemented here. The irony is that some of the families that I represent in Leeds have relatives in India who will go through the same suffering and death as their relations in Armley. This is a classic example of exporting pollution and of economic injustice on an international scale, using boundaries to commercial advantage instead of tackling environmental problems as shared responsibilities.

Just as our neighbours are nearer to us than we sometimes like to think, so the causes of international injustice are nearer than we are preapred to face up to. I remember the Band Aid concert in 1985. Late that night a promoter was asked what he thought of the money that had been coming in. People had been ringing in with donations all night, and he said that there had been an excellent response but that we needed to shift away from private charity and start demanding public justice. We need to move from private compassion to questioning international economic, commercial and political structures. We need to replace emergency relief work with genuine development work.

Many of the young people who took part in Band Aid are now surprised to hear that famine is again threatening in Ethiopia and the Sudan. They really believed that they had solved the problem. The title of this debate suggests progress, but the evidence shows that little progress can be reported back to these young people.

During the whole of the past decade official Government policy has been to reduce the aid budget. Official development assistance is down 24 per cent. since 1979, when it was £2,091,000, Today the figure is £1,579,000. Aid programmes for developing countries were cut by 15 per cent. between 1979 and 1989. Gross public expenditure on overseas aid has fallen by 7 per cent. in the same period. At the same time as challenging this reduction, we must insist that the Government acknowledge the crucial role of trade. I remember a cartoon produced in Mexico which showed a huge man handling a Mexican peasant. He held out a teaspoon in one hand. In the teaspoon was a little pile labelled "Aid". But the other hand was holding the peasant by the throat and on the huge man's arm was enblazened the word "Trade". So, as the teaspoon of aid is offered the trade structures are strangling its recipient.

An example from our corner of the world is the fact that the trade share of developing countries with the EEC has dropped. Their exports to the Community have fallen by 10 per cent. since 1984. That is why the GATT talks are so crucial. If there is only one economic model, as suggested by the hon. Member for Reigate (Mr. Gardiner), it seems to have come up against ultimate breakdown—the deadlock that is holding up the talks. As the world moves towards new bloc politics, with President Bush suggesting in south America recently that north and south America could form a trading block as a bulwark against the EEC linking up with eastern Europe, we could end up with a world divided between the Americas, Europe and the Pacific rim countries. Then there would be a danger of the three major blocs squeezing out two thirds of the developing world. We must work to facilitate the genuine incorporation of developing countries in the multilateral trade system. Systems such as general system of preferences must be made more effective for developing countries.

We also need a wider internationalist vision in politics and economic decision-making in Britain. It is necessary in our trade, aid, cultural exchanges and diplomatic relations.

For years the non-governmental organisations have led the way and have had insufficient Government backing. The Minister spoke about Government aid supporting those who are committed to better government. I hope she does not mean that we should impose a single political and economic outlook on other countries. We should not say, as has been said, that there is no alternative to the market economy. Some people in America suggest that recent developments have changed history. I hope that in their arrogance the Government will not suggest to the rest of the world that economic history as we know it has come to an end and that there is only one model for the economy.

Mrs. Chalker: It is important to correct the hon. Gentleman on two matters. I have never said, and the Government will never say, that only one model of government or economic reform should be imposed on any developing country. Economic reform should be sustainable. It should attract investment and encourage countries to spend within their limits. In my winding-up speech I shall deal with the matters raised by the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Sir D. Steel). The hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) spoke about non-governmental organisations. I am frequently accused of speaking too much about those organisations, so I shall be brief. In 1989-90 we spent more than £65 million with the voluntary sector on the work that it carried out. I am totally devoted to the joint funding scheme and my hon. Friend the Member for Reigate (Mr. Gardiner) spoke about the good work of the NGOs. We have more than quadrupled their funding over the past five years and I shall again increase the contribution this year.

Mr. Battle: I have never had such a long intervention from a Minister and I take it as a compliment. I accept that the Government support NGOs. I hope that the policy implications of the work of some NGOs and their comments will be borne in mind by the Government.

Although the Minister did not refer to the single model economy, the hon. Member for Reigate certainly spoke about it. The Minister spoke about spending within limits. I hope that the Government will not define those limits for other countries or set parameters. It is not only our Government who support the single economic model; the policy is beginning to infect other countries.

The European Community recently published guidelines for co-operation with developing countries in Latin America and Asia. It was published on 19 June in Brussels and contains this interesting passage:

"Economic co-operation consists, essentially, of activities aimed at establishing a 'common language' with our partners in the fields of technology and economics."

We should not start from a common language but should seek a common understanding based on mutual respect. We should not seek to promote a single discourse based on the free market model but should move in the direction of respecting different cultural and economic traditions and languages. Such respect leaves space for the development of economic and political imagination elsewhere. There is no such thing as the best single economy. The debate is the starting point for the issues that I have raised. To ensure that the policies adopted by the Minister's Department are for the benefit of the world's poor, the debate needs to continue in the formulation of Government policy.

The real challenge of the 1980s is to work towards a new world order with the practical objective of eliminating poverty at its core. The best way to tackle poverty is to promote the long-term development of the poor because that will reduce their vulnerability to emergencies and natural disasters. Some good project work is being carried out and there has been some late-in-the-day response to the need for emergency relief. However, that is a piecemeal approach. Tackling poverty should be at the heart of a positive and integrated policy that addresses the links between trade and industry, the environment and poverty. Such a policy should be backed by real budget commitments.

The integrated policy response that I have outlined is sadly lacking. British overseas trade and commerce from arms sales to tied-aid contracts are undermining an effective aid programme. The Minister may think that the export drives by the Ministry of Defence have nothing to do with the aid programme. I hope she will at least admit that they can undermine it by absorbing resources that are needed elsewhere.

While the Government use their newly discovered language of compassion, they lack the international vision to realise that the world needs to look forward to the 21st century. Late-in-the-day, piecemeal projects cannot be a substitute for positive international strategies that address the workings of what we must all acknowledge is a global economy. Tackling structural injustice on that scale must be done on the basis of co-operation and mutual respect. That will be the task for the new Labour Government of the 1990s.

Mr. David Atkinson (Bournemouth, East): Before I concentrate on my main theme, the Palestinian refugees, I shall say something about the crisis of food shortages in the Soviet Union, especially in the major cities. As the House will know, this is one of the many issues for debate at the Rome summit that is taking place this week. It is strange that the Soviet Union should be facing such a food crisis, as this year it has enjoyed a record harvest. As we know, one of the principal problems is that there is a failure in the organisation, transportation and distribution of that food from the points of production to the shops in the cities. I believe that some 20 to 30 per cent. of all the food that is harvested in the Soviet Union fails to get to the shops; it remains rotting in the fields and by the roadside. A lot more is hijacked by the Red Army, the KGB and the various Mafia-style organisations that are becoming more prolific in the cities.

The worry is that the same may happen to the food aid to be donated by the international community and the voluntary organisations. Earlier this week, a small delegation representing three religious-based voluntary organisations—the Women's Campaign for Soviet Jewry, the Jubilee Campaign and the Movement for Christian Democracy—led by the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) met Mr. Zamyatin, the Soviet Ambassador in London, to discuss how food aid and other humanitarian donations being raised by such organisations will be able to reach those for whom it is being donated.

According to Alexander Ornorodnikov, chairman of the Christian Democratic Union, which is organising the distribution of this voluntary aid in Moscow, among the people for whom it is organised and to whom it will be distributed are those who are so elderly and frail that they simply cannot stand in the inevitable queues in the food shops. Such elderly people have been found dead in their flats because they dare not risk their health standing in those queues.

There are also an estimated 600,000 refugees in the Russian Republic, about 65,000 of whom are in Moscow. Over 200 of them are living in tents outside a hotel near Red square. Many have fled from the Islamic republics. Alexander Ognorodnikov has a list of 800 families in urgent need and on a priority list for help.

There are 1,000 orphans in two orphanages in Moscow to whom this food will be personally distributed. There are 1,000 known disabled people on the list of those who are potentially unable to help themselves and who are consequently victims of the food crisis, but who will be helped in this way. There are categorised poor families, the elderly, the sick, the widows, one-parent families and the housebound, who will be helped through the Christian Democratic Union in the Soviet Union.

According to the hon. Member for Mossley Hill, the ambassador's response was positive. He has promised that an Aeroflot flight will be made available every week to transfer to the Soviet Union whatever food and humanitarian aid is raised in this country. However, we must remain concerned about ensuring that that aid will reach the people for whom it is being donated. That also applies to whatever international aid is agreed at the Rome summit. I look forward to my right hon. Friend's response to those points.

I hope that, at Rome, we will insist that the Soviet Union continues to implement its commitment to economic and political reforms, such as private ownership, the market economy, and a pluralistic society. That will do much to ensure that food shortages, like the communism that has caused them, will be confined to the dustbins of history.

As the House knows, one of the most depressed areas in the world for economy, jobs, and quality of life is Palestine. Since the armistice of 1949, Palestine has received billions of dollars of aid through the United Nations and through direct donations to sustain the refugees who were displaced by the Israeli war of independence, many of whom have experienced subsequent displacement because of further conflicts. I referred to their position in some detail during a summer Adjournment debate on 29 July 1988, following a visit to the area to prepare a report for the Council of Europe. Last month, I followed in my own footsteps to prepare a new report, which I want to share with the House today.

I hope that the House will agree that, after 42 years, it is an international scandal that 2·4 million registered refugees continue to be stateless and displaced. We all know why—it is the continued failure of Israel and its Arab neighbours to make a peace settlement possible. I shall refer to that again during my concluding remarks.

It is frequently suggested that it suits both sides to have so many Palestinians in the temporary conditions of camps in Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, and the west bank of Gaza. Of course, the original communities of tents and shacks for those who fled in 1948 have since been replaced by more permanent structures. All 61 camps enjoy infrastructures to varying degrees, such as the provision of education, health services, a sense of community, and special help for hardship families. However, that is due only to the commendable work of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency—UNRWA—in the near east and other international agencies.

This year, the United Kingdom donated £5·64 million to UNRWA for direct aid, and £56 million has been donated since 1979. That is money well spent. Despite the frequent frustrations and the crises in the provision of adequate resources to match the basic needs of refugees, UNRWA is probably achieving the most cost-effective service possible under the circumstances. It compares extremely well with all the other humanitarian services provided by the United Nations. It is my view that no donor nation could have cause to complain that its money was being misspent.

Of particular importance, but consistently overlooked, is the valuable contribution that UNRWA makes to the political stability of the region, where such stability is conspicuously fragile. Without UNRWA there would undoubtedly be more confrontation, casualties, and hardship in Lebanon, Jordan and the occupied territories.

Equally overlooked is Israel's attempt through its defence force, which has acted as the civil administration since 1967, to resettle permanently the refugees in the Gaza strip in neighbourhood communities having a proper infrastructure and municipal services. Although more than 80,000 refugees—some 12,000 families—have been rehoused in that way, most refuse, having been encouraged by the United Nations to believe that it would prejudice their rights pending the outcome of a permanent solution to their situation. It would be surprising if Israel did not now decide that it had other housing priorities to fund.

When I visited the west bank and Gaza in March 1988, the intifada was three months old. It is now three years old, and there is no sign of it coming to an end, despite 858 Palestinians killed, 30,000 injured, 10,000 imprisoned, and 58 deported. Not one of the Palestinians to whom I spoke held out any expectation that that form of demonstration and unarmed resistance against continued Israeli occupation would cease, unless there was real hope of progress to self-determination.

Three years of violence, curfews, strikes and destructive retaliation by the Israeli defence forces have reduced once attractive biblical towns to war-torn communities where squalor and graffiti are rife. Schools are closed so regularly that it is impossible to provide proper education. Municipal services are breaking down, as is the infrastructure—including roads and drainage—and there is disruption of the provision of medical services.

The physical and psychological effect of that on the people has been devastating. They no longer live, but exist. There can be no quality of life under such conditions, and a whole generation of young people have lost their childhood because they are influenced no longer by their elders or the notables of their Arab communities, but by more shadowy factions both within and without—and they are then eager to act as fodder for the visible resistance.

Since making recommendations in 1988, there have been some notable increases in the contributions to UNRWA's budget—in particular, from the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Italy. The United Kingdom's contribution has increased by some 15 per cent. over the past two years. The recent encouraging trend towards peace in Lebanon has resulted in the return of UNRWA's field office in Beirut, and it may yet pave the way for the return of the organisation's head office from Vienna. Thanks to the Llewelyn-Davies feasibility study into UNRWA's organisation—funded by my right hon. Friend's Department, for which we are most grateful to her—a more effective performance is likely to emerge, although as that report stesses, a long-term commitment to capital expenditure will be required if its recommendations are to be completely successful.

I commend my right hon. Friend and her Department also for the grant and loan aids that they are giving to projects designed to discourage dependency and to encourage responsibility, enterprise, and income generation. My right hon. Friend is in regular contact with a number of non-governmental organisations, particularly Co-operation for Development. I was particularly impressed on my visits to two such projects. One was a television aerial manufacturer near Ramallah, who is now successfully selling his products to the Israeli market, and the other was a dental surgery in Nablus.

Palestinians are extremely entrepreneurial and will quickly produce a return on investment, and create new prosperity and jobs, if they are allowed to do so. It is to be regretted that, far from encouraging the establishment of such an economic base in its occupied territories, Israel actively discourages Palestinian enterprise in many ways, as I detailed in my report to the Council of Europe.

There have been two new developments of great significance for the situation of the Palestinian refugees since my 1988 report. The first is the effect of the Gulf crisis. For decades, refugee families have relied on incomes sent back to them by tens of thousands of Palestinians who have found work in Kuwait and other oil-producing countries—it has been estimated that between $130 million and £150 million is remitted to their families every year. But because of the crisis, that has ceased and Palestinians are returning home jobless. Not only is that resulting in an immediate end to such income, and a consequent increase in hardship cases for UNRWA to deal with; it has also added to unemployment and thus to instability in Jordan and the occupied territories.

In September, the commissioner general of UNRWA issued a special appeal to major donors for immediate and generous assistance to overcome the shortfall in funding the emergency related programme. I look forward to learning from my right hon. Friend this afternoon of the Government's response to the commissioner general's appeal. The second new development, which has far more serious long-term consequences for the region, is the recent, current and anticipated influx of so many Soviet Jews into Israel. Following the opening of the floodgates in October 1989, 120,000 have arrived in the first year, and the Jewish Agency, with which I had meetings—I also visited an absorption centre for Soviet Jews—expects that more than 3 million Soviet Jews will come in the foreseeable future. It is possible that the figure will be higher, as there are 11 million Jewish people living in the Soviet Union. Therefore it is understandable that Palestinian refugees fear that such an influx will prove to be at their expense in terms of jobs, housing and the resources that Israel currently makes available in the occupied territories.

In discussions that I had with four Israeli Ministers —it was my privilege to meet four Ministers in one day —including Mr. Sharon, the Housing Minister, it was suggested that there were no grounds for such fears, and that, in any case, Israel has assured the United States of America, as its major donor, that there will be no settlement of Soviet Jews in what is termed Judaea and Sumaria—the west bank.

I fear that I have found clear evidence that Soviet Jews are settling beyond the green line in east Jerusalem, and on the west bank. It must be obvious that, with the enormous numbers to come, a great deal many more will do so. Labour-intensive Palestinian refugee jobs will also be lost to Soviet Jews, not least because of the frequent imposition of night curfews, which prevent Palestinians from commuting daily into Israel to those jobs.

The aim of my report to the Council of Europe is humanitarian. It is not to recommend political solutions which will result in a just resolution of the refugee problem. Last Tuesday's debate on the Gulf crisis demonstrated once again that, even though there must be no linkage with that peaceful withdrawal from Kuwait which the entire world is urging on Iraq, the opportunity provided by such an outcome should be used to resolve other outstanding problems in the region. They include a resolution of the Kurdish problem, to which the entire world has turned a blind eye during the past 50 years and which will not go away. I see the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) in his place. He has championed the Kurdish cause for many years.

I was reminded of that cause by the reply by my right hon. Friend the Minister to my question which was published yesterday. I asked

"how much aid Her Majesty's Government have provided to Kurdish refugees for each year since 1979".

My right hon. Friend replied:

"two grants totalling £550,000 to assist Iraqi Kurds in Turkey and ethnic Turkish refugees from Bulgaria."—[Official Report, 13 December 1990; Vol. 182, c. 480.]

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North) rose——

Mr. Atkinson: I see that the hon. Gentleman wants to catch my eye. I suspect that I am anticipating what he wants to tell me, but I gladly give way to him.

Mr. Corbyn: I thank the hon. Gentleman for giving way and for his reference to me. I very much agree with what he said. Is he aware that some of the 30,000 Kurdish people who fled from Iraq to Turkey in 1988 are still living in three camps in Turkey? They are not recognised as refugees by the Turkish Government. So far as I am aware, none of the aid which has been allocated has got through to the camps—it has been blocked by the Turkish Government. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman agrees that that is scandalous. Does he agree that the instability in the region is caused partly by the Palestinian issue and partly by the long-term issue of the rights of Kurdish people in Turkey, Iran, Iraq and Syria? Until that problem is resolved, there will be no peace in the region.

Mr. Atkinson: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for what he says. I shall pursue this matter further in the opportunity which is provided on Tuesday 29 January, when the Council of Europe is to debate a report and will inquire into precisely what has happened to the Kurdish refugees in Turkey and to the international aid which has been given to them.

We are talking about the Kurdish refugees from Iraq who are fleeing from the poison gas attacks of Saddam Hussein's air force in 1988, when 3,000 to 5,000 of them were killed. I have a moving account by a 19-year-old boy who saw what happened when those gas bombs were dropped. I shall quote it, because it should be on the record:

"The bombs dropped and a green smoke arose. The people scratched their eyes, and then shook. They screamed out and then fell to the ground and shook again. Then they were still. We went down into the gorge and found a slime over their eyes and also running from their nose and mouth. The next day, men with goggles and gloves came and piled up the bodies. Some were still alive, but were piled on anyway, and then set on fire. There were screams coming from the burning bodies. They will be with me for the rest of my life."

That is Saddam Hussein. How right we are to show that man up for what he is.

The Kurdish people populate five countries—Iran, Iraq, Syria, Turkey and the Soviet Union. Their right to self-determination deserves recognition by the rest of the world, now and certainly when the Gulf crisis is over, or they will continue to be persecuted, continue to be refugees and continue to be tempted into terrorism—some are members of the PKK in Turkey.

Another outstanding problem in the region to be resolved, I hope, after the Gulf dispute is over is that of restoring sovereignty to Lebanon, with the withdrawal of all occupying forces from that country. But the principal outstanding issue to be resolved is the Palestinian problem.

I was encouraged during my discussions with both the Israelis and the Palestinians to find that there is a far narrower gulf between their views than I expected. Their views are defined in the Shamir peace plan produced 18 months ago and the Palestinian National Council declaration of November 1988. Each recognises the rights of the other, in the case of the PLO for the first time. Israel has always maintained that it does not want or need an international conference at which bilateral negotiations can take place such as those which succeeded in the case of Egypt at Camp David. But Israel stands condemned for the current stalemate.

I suggest to my right hon. Friend the Minister and to her colleagues in the Foreign Office that there is no reason why, now or following the resolution of the Gulf crisis, two simultaneous initiatives could not be urged on Israel and the Palestinians. Such initiatives could transform the climate and allow negotiations to commence. The first should be a requirement on Israel to commit itself to negotiate when the intifada has come to an end. The second should be a requirement on the Palestinians to bring the intifada to an end if Israel has made a commitment to negotiate. I have no doubt, that that strategy will be regarded as too simple by half, but I commend it to my right hon. Friend in the hope that it will resolve 42 years of displacement of 2·25 million Palestinian refugees.

Mr. Alan Williams (Swansea, West): Even today's newspapers report that over 10 million people are at risk again in Ethiopia and Sudan from famine and starvation. That pinpoints the complexity and difficulty of resolving the problem that we face. We are continually beset by new short-term demands to meet the symptoms of the problem while at the same time we need to tackle the fundamental causes.

I recognise that the difficulty of Governments is not only the complexity but the scale and inter-relationship of the problems. Low food productivity, climatically induced famine, starvation and death, population growth, illiteracy and lack of birth control are all interrelated. The problem is knowing where to start and which problem should be given priority.

We must also recognise that events in the developing world are taking place too far away for many people in the industrial and developed world. They can dip into their pockets and feel good occasionally about helping with an individual problem, but the problems of Africa, Asia and south America do not impinge all that directly on their lives except by pricking their consciences occasionally.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) said, the problems of developing countries matter to everyone in a way of which we are only just beginning to become aware. She referred to the problem of global warming. The West is beginning to turn its political and social attention to that problem. If the world's population expands at the rate expected between now and 2025, the amount of carbon dioxide produced by mankind will double during that time. The amount has already trebled since 1950.

We are all aware that the forests are an important factor in the levels of carbon dioxide but it is not appreciated that the difference between the United Nations low-case projection of population growth and its medium-case projection is so great that if the higher projection is accurate, the extra carbon dioxide produced in the world will be the same amount as that which has resulted from deforestation.

We must face the reality that although humanitarian appeal has not led us to divert the resources necessary to deal with the problem, self-interest may well force Governments to do just that. It may be cheaper to deal with the problems than to deal with the consequences of ignoring them. The whole of mankind will pay, if helping the third world is not seen, as a matter not just of good works—I wish that that were sufficient appeal—but of good economic sense for the industrialised countries. It is also a matter of survival for the children of those who are making the decisions in those countries.

In her opening comments, the Minister said that Britain could not solve the problems alone and, indeed, we cannot. On the other hand, we can play our full part and, clearly, we are not doing that. My hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley showed the scale of the inadequacy of the help given by the British Government. Recently in another place in a debate on a similar subject, the Minister said that the Government accepted in principle the target of 0·7 per cent. of gross national product laid down by the United Nations as the aid target from developed countries to the third world.

In 1987 and 1988 our contribution was way under half of that. In each of those years we gave more than £1·5 billion less than we would have done, had we conformed to the UN target. In the past five years we have not contributed between £8 billion and £9 billion because the Government have refused to meet the United Nations target, which they accept "in principle". If the Government can accept the target in principle, but only in principle, when we are oil-rich, what hope is there of the Government ever attaining it when our oil wealth diminishes or disappears? We are giving a smaller percentage of our GNP in aid than we did in 1979.

Too many pressures are pulling in the opposite direction. My hon. Friend referred to debt repayment.

[Mr. Alan Williams]

Limited state aid is being massively offset by the private exploitation of the very areas that we say we want to help. My hon. Friend dealt with the financial aspects of that.

One part of the third-world problem, as it is called, which stirs us most deeply, particularly at Christmas when we enter a period of overt sentimentality and high spending, is the pictures and prospect of children dying in third-world countries. We are fortunate in that only 11 children in 1,000 die in the first five years of life. In the poorest countries the figure is 20 and in Ethiopia it is more than 30.

Diarrhoeal diseases are the biggest killer of children worldwide.

Mrs. Chalker indicated assent.

Mr. Williams: The Minister nods her head in approval.

Mrs. Chalker: Not in approval.

Mr. Williams: Not in approval, but in agreement.

Of the 5 million children who die a year, a quarter die from diarrhoeal diseases. The Lancet says that the risk of dying from such diseases is 14 times greater for children who are bottle-fed, while UNICEF states that children who are bottle-fed are 25 times more likely to die from any illness than those who are fed natural milk. Far too many children are dying from diseases that are exacerbated by foodstuffs that substitute for natural milk.

The paradox is that while our Government are trying, albeit inadequately, to reduce infant mortality, western companies are contributing to it enormously. Nestlé, for example, provides free dried milk for hospitals. It does so to trap mothers on to a feeding regime despite the fact that the vast proportion of mothers in the developing countries are illiterate and are therefore unable to read or understand the instructions. Those countries' water supplies are also contaminated, so when mothers use that dried milk it adds to the likelihood of their children dying from illnesses. Such free dried milk is given despite the fact that natural lactation has a contraceptive value for the mother when breast feeding.

Recently a documentary was shown on Australian television entitled "The Formula Fix". The subject was Nestlé but that company has not dared to sue the television company. The programme concerned the code that relates to milk products. The world health authorities and UNICEF drew up that code in 1986, but the documentary revealed that, two years after that, it had evidence that Nestlé had deliberately tried to find its way around the code. In the Philippines the code relating to free milk had applied for two years, but the documentary recorded:

"Nestlé also implemented a scheme to circumvent the provision in the Code banning free supplies. Nestlé representatives asked hospital personnel to sign requests for supplies which are then delivered as a credit purchase to the hospital or clinic, with a tacit understanding that collection of payments will not be pursued. These 'sales' are then written off as uncollected debts or bad debts, and Nestlé not only escapes charges of giving away free supplies but also used the bad debts to reduce income taxes."

That is one way in which a major western company is peddling products that increase the likelihood of death among children in the third world. One may ask why that company gives free food to the hospitals and whether it is worth it. The charity, however, ends the moment the mother leaves hospital. When we realise how much it costs those families to sustain the supply of milk products, we begin to understand where Nestlés charity originates and why medical authorities say that it would be far better if the same money were spent on nourishing the mother rather than on buying those food products.

It takes 18 per cent. of the annual wage in Botswana to buy 40 kg of Nestlé's formula. For that money, the family could buy 62 kg of milk plus 36 kg of beef and 208 kg of sorghum. In Zimbabwe, 21 per cent. of the annual wage is spent on milk products. That is equivalent to 124 litres of sour milk plus 37 kg of beans and 207 kg of maize meal. The family is giving up that amount of nutrition to sustain the feed regime that Nestlé established in hospital. In Kenya the figure is as high as 47 per cent. of the annual wage.

Mr. Corbyn: A problem in Zimbabwe is not that the feed regime for babies is often imposed by Nestlé and its ilk, but that the soft drinks regime for the whole population is imposed by the Coca-Cola corporation. Hardly any fruit juices are available for children to drink, despite the nature of the country, which could be prolific in growing fruit.

Mr. Williams: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for that intervention. I am citing one example to demonstrate the way in which companies in the west are working against the aid programmes of western Governments, paradoxically often with the support and subsidy of those same Governments. In other words, families in the third world who have so little are being expected to provide the dividends for the shareholders in the west who already have so much. As my hon. Friend says, it is the same with soft drinks and tobacco.

Consider the hypocrisy of the west. We in the EC have laid down targets for tobacco products, and products that do not meet the tar ceilings imposed by the Commission cannot be sold in the west. Instead, they are going to the third world. According to the World bank, 80 per cent. of the world's population will be in what we call third-world countries by the turn of the century. Confronted with concern about health and restrictions imposed in the west—especially in Europe, but particularly in the United States—the companies concerned are selling their products in the third world.

BAT Industries, our fifth-largest company, like its American competitors, is trying fiercely to build up its share of third-world markets. In Kenya, for example, BAT had sales of £50 million in 1985. By last year the figure had reached £89 million, an increase of 80 per cent., representing a 20 per cent. per year growth rate.

Even more evil and unforgiveable, we in the EC are shipping our high-tar, unacceptable tobacco output—the output is forming a tobacco mountain—to those countries. The European taxpayer is subsidising the companies involved to the tune of £740 million a year, which is half of what the British Government are giving in aid to the third world. The European Economic Community is paying half of the subsidy to the tobacco manufacturers to enable them to sell, in the third world, products that are banned in this country. The British taxpayer is paying £100 million a year of those subsidies, so British money is contributing to the build-up of that disgusting trade by the tobacco manufacturers.

I referred to the hypocrisy of the west, the EC and the Americans. The Americans have gathered their might in Iraq—I support our troops there—but America is taking on another deadly foe, Thailand, which was a threat to the American way of life because it had a ban on the import, the advertisement, point of sale promotion and general promotion, of tobacco products. Mighty America could not actually send in its aircraft carriers and air force, which was preoccupied, so it used a different sledgehammer—the general agreement on tariffs and trade and the threat of unilateral trade sanctions against Thailand. That is the scale of hypocrisy in America and this country.

The tobacco companies have enlisted the subsidies of the EC and the diplomatic power of the American Government to secure their markets. When America gains those markets, it gears its advertising to women who are deemed to be particularly vulnerable and to the young. In most of those countries, unlike in the west, there are no age limits on the sale of tobacco. Therefore, we are providing aid on a diminutive scale to appease the public conscience, while bleeding those countries commercially and risking destroying the health of their population simply for the financial benefit of a limited number of western shareholders.

I shall conclude with three brief quotations to demonstrate the problem that we face. The first is from The Sunday Times of 13 May. A BAT spokesman said:

"BAT's policy is very clear. Our view is that smoking has not been established to be the cause of disease."

The second quotation is from the firm handling the advertising, which states:

"Our view is that if you can buy something freely, the manufacturers should be able to advertise it."

The third quotation is from Britain's chief medical officer, Sir Donald Acheson who, when told of the situation, said:

"I fail to understand how anyone can bring themselves to continue to promote this deadly habit."

Such hypocrisy, disregard and contempt for human life typifies the commercial practice that is completely undermining and swamping the attempts of western Governments to help the problems of the third world. Since appeals to conscience and humanitarianism have failed, I only hope that when the west recognises the link between the problems of the third world and the crisis of global warming, it will do, in self-interest, what it failed to do out of charity and good will.

1.24 pm

Mr. Peter Bottomley (Eltham):

"Wouldn't you cut down a tree to cook your next meal if there was no other option?

The environment is a luxury; only those who have enough food already have the time to worry about it. You eat the chocolate biscuits—you people who have never seen a cocoa tree. We pick the cocoa beans—we people who have never tasted chocolate biscuits. You worry about the environment. We cut down trees.

I tell you: there is only one way to solve the threat to the environment. Poverty must be eliminated. How? You must have less. We must have more. You must not give of your surplus. You must sacrifice to give. You must not give out of pity or guilt. You must give out of love. We need your help. But we want to be treated like fellow children of God, not animals on whom you dump food. If you will listen, I will tell you how to do it".

Those words are by Bernard Guri, the co-ordinator of agriculture and development for the Catholic church in Ghana, as quoted in a book called "Bad Samaritans" by Paul Vallelly.

If we are to deal with the four elements of development —relief, development itself, justice and empowerment—we must start with various imperatives, which will not work for all of us at the same time but which are all relevant.

We live in a country that expects to double its standard of living twice in the lifetime of each person. In the past 10 years there have been changes in the level of aid. We hold slightly repetitive debates, in which Conservative Members say that the aid budget has increased and Opposition Members—and occasionally Conservative Members—claim that we have not met the 0·7 per cent. target. Changes in trade have taken away three or four times as much in foreign exchange earnings from developing countries as have the changes in the amount of aid.

At the Africa Centre a few days ago, when the book "Bad Samaritans" was discussed by my right hon. Friend the Member for Bath (Mr. Patten) and by Dr. Charles Elliott, Dean of Trinity Hall, Cambridge and former director of Christian Aid, I asked how we might double or redouble our loving. Dr. Elliott suggested that it might be by increasing our vulnerability. One of the problems with our developed world is that we try to erect defences against any sort of risk. We put up military defences to stop countries being threatened or overrun. We try to create economic barriers so that no one from outside can threaten our jobs. Dr. Elliott was probably right to suggest that we need to share some of the experiences and risks of people in other countries.

My hon. Friends the Members for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) and for Reigate (Mr. Gardiner) rightly said—I think that the Front-Bench speakers agreed with them—that we must try to ensure that the benefits of flexible political and economic processes are not only available to others but are advertised as essential to the idea of empowerment.

During the past 10 or 20 years more people have suffered because of wars between countries and within countries than have suffered from changes in trade. We should be proud that more countries in the past 10 or 15 years have chosen political systems in which the Government can be changed without resort to the bomb and the bullet or to exile. This has happened in the European Community—in Spain, Portugal and Greece. It has happened in some of the countries of Africa, and now it has happened in middle and eastern Europe and, although imperfectly, in central and south America. We must never forget that.

In 1978 the then Minister for Overseas Development acknowledged in response to a report by the Select Committee on Overseas Development that when renegotiating the Lomé convention it was important to recognise that aid would not work effectively in repressive or chaotic countries. In those days the prime example was Uganda, but there are other examples in the world today.

These sort of debates work best when we reduce the partisan element in them as much as possible. I sometimes get fed up with the idea that there was a golden world under the last Labour Government. I was elected in a by-election in June 1975 soon after Dame Judith Hart stepped down as Minister of Overseas Development—a post which seemed to be in and out of the Cabinet at the time. Between 1974 and 1979 we saw the reverse of what we have seen under the present Government.

[Mr. Peter Bottomley]

In the Government response to a report from the Select Committee on Overseas Development the first Minister for Overseas Development in the present Government said that because of economic circumstances it would not be possible to exempt overseas aid from the cuts in public spending. That may or may not have been appropriate in 1980, but it is certainly not appropriate now after eight years of the most significant economic growth in the European Community. We must join the Opposition to attain the 0.7 per cent. programme. Such partnership has been mentioned often by Labour and Liberal Democrat Members.

The Government and Conservative Members cannot take much pride in the good things that are happening in overseas development unless the commitment to the 0.7 per cent. programme is either scrapped, which I hope is inconceivable, or met. It would be far better to meet it. These issues do not need to be stressed to my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development, but they need to be brought to the attention of my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer and my right hon. and learned Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury.

People must show a greater and more consistent interest in overseas aid, and that requires action at local community level. We need to develop individual responses from a significant minority of our constituents. That must be developed by communal action at parish level and by those who are not church-linked. Local developments matter most.

When the Brandt committee report was published in 1981 or 1982 the World Development Movement organised a lobby. It called for a voluntary donation of what I once said was £20 a head, but I was recently reminded that it was £6 a head. Only 600 people responded to that appeal and that is not a very good way to raise £60 each from 56 million people by Government decision. Work must continue with voluntary organisations also to increase voluntary gifts which can then be matched by what I hope will be the product of the work of the European Community on agricultural and medical research. The Community can help in other ways. There is a residual question about when the Community will have a presence in South Africa. My hon. Friend the Member for Reigate spoke about some developments in that country and it is good to note that more hon. Members propose to see what can be done even while South Africa is in the middle of its very welcome transition.

I hope that the Community will not continue its sterile debate between directorate-general I and directorate-general VIII on whether South Africa should have a diplomat or someone involved in development, because it is quite apparent that South Africa needs a development expert now. In time perhaps it may have the first European Community directorate-general I representative as a delegate, but to begin with we should opt for the development expert.

The European Commission should try to find someone who knows about the Southern African Development Co-ordinating Committee and who has had experience in Namibia, where European Community help has been well absorbed. The relationships between South Africa and the states around and within it should be patched up, and for that job it is important to have someone who will be respected by the South Africans. He must not be a patsy but someone who has been willing to stand up to them in the past and has worked with South African representatives in Windhoek. That is a matter for the Community and for Governments, but I suspect that what I have said will be echoed by parliamentarians in Germany, France, the Netherlands, Denmark and in most of the other Community countries.

There is a need for education in world citizenship and I am glad to see a small Government grant to the council for education in that subject. I think that that organisation was born as a result of the efforts of the grandfather of my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley). One of the results of young men working and living at Toynbee hall was that not only did the first Earl Attlee go on to become leader of the Labour party and Prime Minister, nor that Beveridge produced in the early 1940s his report that led——

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South and Shoreditch): It was 1944.

Mr. Bottomley: I am grateful to the graduate from Oxford for giving me the date. It also produced Max Garnett, who went on beyond national politics into developing the concept of world citizenship, referred to by the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Sir D. Steel). The right hon. Member spoke about the benefits of experience in the Voluntary Services Overseas. I am not sure that he is right to say that another country will gain much from a young British person aged 21 going to it. Far more, such a young person will come back enthused for the rest of his working life.

I know that the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) did VSO. Anthony Bevins, a distinguished correspondent, who is not observing the debate, is another. People in advertising, the Civil Service and many other organisations have carried the benefit of their service overseas into their work. The Select Committee on Overseas Development took evidence in India in 1978 which showed how civil servants such as Michael Jay of the High Commission and Dick Alford of the British Council, having done similar work, have risen up through the Civil Service with an enthusiasm that helped to infect their work and our thinking.

World citizenship matters, and I hope that the Council for Education in World Citizenship will, on a limited scale, continue to make contact with teachers and pupils so that others will realise that the third world is not just a place to go for rest and recreation. It is a place to go to develop a sense of solidarity with the peoples of the world.

I should like to raise a number of points made in the book "Bad Samaritans—First World Ethics and Third World Debt", but other hon. Members wish to speak, so I shall sum up in two ways. First, justice and righteousness need to flow. We cannot put up a barrier and keep them to ourselves. We need to allow the flow, to learn and to give—that is what sharing is all about. Secondly, we need to help people to grow their own prosperity, as we did with all the help that we got after the war with Marshall aid and from the IMF when it was necessary to borrow. As happens in India, the vast majority of resources, both human and capital, must be generated within the countries themselves. Even 10 years ago, 95 per cent. of capital investment in India came from its own resources.

We need to find ways to work with countries. Most recipients have a grant management department that tries to match what is on offer to what is needed so that projects are not determined by the donor countries—as other people may think.

I shall end with two short quotations from the book. One is from Pope John Paul II, who said:

"Anyone wishing to renounce the difficult yet noble task of improving the lot of. . .all people, with the excuse that the struggle is difficult and that constant effort is required, or simply because of the experience of defeat and the need to begin again, that person would be betraying the will of God the Creator."

If people start asking for a practical thing to do, I need quote only the concluding words of the book:

"The first step to a global conversion must be global acknowledgement that wrong is being done. Our new knowledge is a cause for optimism and a spur to action. Are those of us with two coats now prepared to give one away?"

1.38 pm

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, South): I apologise to the House for not having been here for the Minister's speech and for part of the speech by my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd), but I had a 9 o'clock engagement in my constituency. What I heard of my hon. Friend's speech—the last part of it—was excellent. She put forward a serious case about the problems of the world, how the Labour party sees them and how a Labour Government will tackle them. We live in a world on the brink of environmental disaster. It will not happen suddenly one day but is growing apace. It will arise out of the worsening environmental problems.

The world is not just divided by poverty and by the misuse and misallocation of resources—it is increasingly divided by poverty and there is an increasing misallocation of resources. We must examine the quality of life for large numbers of people on our planet. There is a general north-south distinction, but there are also enormous imbalances within the economic systems of countries in western Europe and north America. The quality of life for people living in cardboard boxes under the theatres of the south bank is similar to that for people living in shanty towns in third-world countries. The system allows those people to live like that.

In general, for the majority of the world's population life is short, life expectancy is very short, income levels are low—and, in many places, declining—and the prospect for many people living in the poorest countries in Africa and Latin America does not include the opening of new schools, new hospitals and new social services centres and an improvement in social facilities—it is a prospect of hospital closed, school class sizes increased and of the quality of life constantly deteriorating.

Far from there being a constant flow of resources and aid from northern countries to southern countries, the opposite is the case, and has been for most of the past 200 years. Colonialism was not about exporting civilisations; it was not about improving the lot of people in the poorest countries—it was driven by greed and avarice and a determination to control other people's lives. It was about ensuring that the work, the raw materials and the food of the poorer countries flowed out to the richest parts of the world. That is the legacy of colonialism and imperialism that we have to deal with today. I honestly believe that the role of the world's twin financial institutions, the International Monetary Fund and the World bank, is essentially to reassert that old-world order so that once more a minority of northern, predominantly rich countries dominate the majority of southern, predominantly poor countries.

We frequently raise the issue of environmental destruction. I wish to quote from an article by S. M. Mohamed Idris in the current issue of Third World Resurgence, a magazine produced by Third World Network, of Penang in Malaysia. It produced excellent research material on the problems of third-world countries. The article is headed:

"What green really means for the Third World."

It states:

"As political leaders compete to show concern on the environment, confusion reigns on what is 'ecological'. Ecologists define sustainable development as a harmonious relationship between humanity and nature, preserving the integrity of the ecology whilst enabling healthy human survival. But political and commercial elites think sustainable development merely means sustaining the supply of raw materials to continue the existing production systems."

That article well amplifies much of the problem.

People in the north are rightly concerned about the environment and rightly want changes to the environmental protection measures in this and in other countries, but they are not prepared to do anything about the economic system that brings about so much environmental destruction. The article also states that the effect of so-called development measures, the effect of economic restructuring in so many countries in the third world, is not to preserve and protect the environment, but is to finance and encourage environmental destruction.

A magazine produced by Survival International states:

"The Brazilian Union of Indigenous Nations . . . and . . . Ailton Krenak, has been awarded the Greek 1990 Onassis Prize for Man and Society."

In receiving that prize, people referred to their experience of life in the Brazilian rain forests and to their friends and compatriots who have been killed by the armed forces, which have gone into the Brazilian rain forests to clear the way for logging and mining companies and for road development. They said:

"All of us carry the memory of the day when the world supported all of its people—feeding us, taking care of us, putting us to sleep with the songs of the birds, rivers, waterfalls and forests. Were we an undeveloped world then? Were the international development institutions created to silence the birds, and to cut down the forests . . . When we transform the planet into a large desert—is that the day when we will be truly developed?"

They have an understanding of life that many people in this country find hard to imagine.

The destruction of the rain forests by logging companies, of savanna grassland, and of so many other aspects of our environment that are essential to continuing ecosystems, together with the overfishing and pollution of the seas, have been brought about by an economic system that encourages not development but dependence on an international trade system that essentially benefits the northern countries, and their multinational corporations in particular.

The relationship between aid, trade, development and environment is very important. I fully support, of course, the donation by the richer countries of 0·7 per cent. of their gross national product as part of their aid programmes. It is important that aid should be of good quality. However, for all the aid that is given there is a return not of onefold or fivefold, but tenfold and more in debt repayments by the poorest countries. Their total debt is currently $1·3 trillion and, frankly, it is unpayable. It was incurred because those countries were encouraged to borrow large sums at the time of the petrodollar boom in the early 1970s, to meet the cost of industrial development programmes. At the same time, they were encouraged to produce more of their basic commodities—cocoa, rice, tea, coffee, minerals, and tin in particular. The problem is that they control neither the interest rates at which that debt is fixed nor the prices that they receive for their commodities.

The present crisis of debt repayment means that many countries are forced to borrow more money—and to pay the interest on the new debt, they borrow more money still. To meet the interest on that debt, they borrow yet again. It is rather like mortgaging one's house six times over, every time that one falls into arrears with mortgage repayments. I seem to be losing the attention of some of my hon. Friends, but I hope that they too understand that remortgaging and remortgaging leads ultimately to disaster.

That disastrous situation was met by the west, with the Latin American countries united in threatening non-repayment of their debts, with the Baker and Brady plans, which imposed on those Latin American countries an economic model that ensured not that they paid less, but that they incurred more debt for deregulation of their economies, cuts in public expenditure, and passing poverty on to the poorest of their people.

British banks say that they have suffered as as result of the debt crisis, yet in 1989 alone, they achieved tax write-offs of £1,700 million in respect of debt non-repayments, which is considerably more than the British aid programme.

United States aid to Latin America over the next period is likely to be $2 billion, yet debt repayments by those countries to the United States over the same period are likely to total $20 billion—tenfold the value of the aid. If we are to redress world imbalances, we must confront the question of commodity prices. The GATT round is being treated as an argument between the United States and western Europe. That round, and the economic model behind it, is disastrous for the poorest people in the poorest countries of the world. It encourages multi-national agribusiness into third-world countries, and discourages food self-sufficiency. It encourages environmental destruction and discourages environmental protection. There has to be a real interest in the prices paid for basic commodities rather than the present system.

Unless we address those problems from the point of view of a world where development is genuinely sustainable, where protection of the environment is vital, where the earth's wealth is redistributed in favour of the poorest people in the poorest countries, in the next few years we shall face a growing imbalance between north and south. Ever-increasing numbers of people will flee from environmental destruction—from rain forest destruction, increased desertification and the increased flooding linked to that. Millions of people will have to flee from the places where they grew up and live and there will be growing imbalances in the world, and growing poverty. There has to be a change in the relationship. That means that higher prices must be paid for commodities. It means that there must be an increased aid programme, and an understanding that we are all in this together, rather than the reassertion of the economic models that are being imposed upon us and upon other countries at present.

For many people the problems that they face are summed up in an answer to a question put to a Sri Lankan Minister at a United Nations meeting. A journalist asked him why third-world countries went to the UN with monotonous regularity to complain about the same problems of debts, restructuring, aid, development and the environment. He answered that it was quite simple—it was because we all have the same Finance Minister, the International Monetary Fund.

I am delighted that we are having this debate today. I suspect that the House will have to return to this subject more often. If we do not, we shall be reneging on our responsibilities to consider the world globally and internationally, rather than in the selfish way in which the current economic doctrines of the IMF and the World bank insist that we consider it.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): I could not agree more with what my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) has said. He is very knowledgeable on this subject and he is right that we will have to return to it again.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) said, it is remarkable that this is one of the rare occasions when there has been a debate on overseas aid. Most of the time such debates have been in Opposition time. Contrast that with the fact that only the other day, a full day's debate was devoted to destroying the environment in the middle east. That was what we were about when we discussed in an Adjournment debate the question of supporting American troops in the Gulf, under the guise of discussing the United Nations.

We all know what the score is. I find it remarkable that the Minister or any other hon. Member on the Tory Benches can consider the problem of aid to the Third world and the underdeveloped world, while on 15 January or thereafter they will take part in helping to destroy large areas of the middle east. They have even talked about the use of nuclear weapons. Now it is the practice to fight wars in the Third world. Since the second world war, most wars have been in underdeveloped countries. They say, "We have some new technology, equipment and munitions, let us try them out." They had eight years of practice in Iran and Iraq. The Government, along with the Americans, Russians, Germans, French and all the rest, used that eight-year war to test their new technology.

The Government have a cheek. "Goody Two-Shoes," the Minister, comes along today in her hunting jacket, and tells us that she feels sorry about the Third world and its problems, yet the Government are going to blast some of them off the face of the earth. It really does show the Government up.

Arms are being sold all the time. More is being spent on arms than is being spent to feed little kids in Ethiopia and the Sudan, with their little pot bellies and spindly legs. Every so often we see them on television and everyone is supposed to feel sorry. Here we have a Government who have had £100 billion in oil revenue—never before have we had such riches in this country—but they cannot find enough money to help the Third world, or an amount equivalent to that paid out by the Labour Government in 1979, although that was not enough.

What do the Government do next? They say that they will give aid through the Common Market—the great wonderful Common Market that they talk so much about. What a joke. I remember what the Tories were saying in 1971—"Join the Common Market. We will have the Lomé convention and we will feed the third world." What has happened since? They have piled up all the food. There are wine lakes and all sorts of other things—there was no wine lake when Lord Jenkins was around, because he supped it all. They have all this food, and what happens? They destroy it. They introduce schemes and say to farmers, "For God's sake, don't produce any food." They say that they will have a set-aside scheme, and they pay farmers £80 an acre to watch the grass grow.

Millions of people in Africa, central and south America and other parts of the world, including little babies, have to rely on Terry Wogan and one or two others on the BBC. The Government try to salve their conscience by setting up some little scheme that might help for the day. We are talking about 12 countries in the Common Market, some of the richest in the world. If they wanted, they could feed all those people without any problem.

This country has a greater responsibility than most. When I was a kid at school, people said, "All these pink pieces belong to Britain. We have India, Canada, Australia and all these countries in Africa." What was the game? The colonial masters of yesteryear, the Tories of their day, were ripping off those countries to take all their minerals, food and God knows what else. We have a bigger responsibility than even some of the other countries in the tinpot Common Market. The Lomé convention did not deliver the goods. It could not do so because it dealt with capitalist nations. They are not in the business of helping anyone; they are in the business of making profits. If they have too much food, someone says, "You are producing too much. We are not making profits. Get rid of it. Burn it." But Ministers tell us that they have a heart.

The Minister spoke about debts. As I said, this is a scandal. The impoverished countries want their debts written off, as my hon. Friends said, but in the past three years since the 1987 general election, the Government have written off debts for the top four clearing banks in Britain —National Westminster, Midland, Barclays and Lloyds —amounting to £3 billion. Why? The Government did so because those banks overreached themselves in the third world. The Government have allowed their tax liabilities to be written off, but that money should have gone to write off the debts of the impoverished third-world countries. The banks have made massive profits during the past 11 years under the Government.

The Minister talked about help from the International Monetary Fund and the World bank. What do we expect from them? Most of the time the IMF and the World bank say, "We will give you a few bob if you behave yourself." What does "Behave yourself" mean? In political terms, it means adopting privatisation measures—

Mr. Corbyn: Closing hospitals.

Mr. Skinner: —closing hospitals and accepting tobacco. That is what it is about. We are not likely to get anywhere in that regard.

The Minister did not mention the Export Credits Guarantee Department because she was too embarrassed to do so. That insurance company stood the test of time until recently. What is more, its purpose was to enable third-world countries to buy goods on tick, sometimes writing off debts. That great insurance scheme was solvent under all previous Governments. What happened under this lot—the Government of entrepreneurs, the Cabinet full of business men and one woman, who reckon that they are smarter than anyone else and that they know the answers to all the economic problems? They have Chancellors of the Exchequer coming out of every pore. The Government get the ECGD bankrupt and then sell it off.

It staggers me that the Government have the nerve to talk about giving money to the third world. My hon. Friend the hon. Member for Cynon Valley put the case in a nutshell: the amount of money going to the third world in overseas aid is almost half what it was. My right hon. Friend the Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) said that much of that is linked with private enterprise. The third-world countries have to buy those goods or they will not receive the money.

Then the Minister mentioned parliamentary democracy. Apparently one of the things that we have which is valuable is our democratic system. We are told that we should go out to third-world countries and tell them to adopt the great system that we have here. Well, they would be happy on a Friday when only 10 Members of Parliament turn up for the debate. A lot of hon. Members on the Tory side are moonlighting in the City making money hand over fist. Five or six of them have about nine jobs apiece and 19 former Tory Cabinet Ministers have 59 directorships between them. Yet we tell third-world countries, "We want you to have parliamentary democracy on British lines." What a joke. We offer them the House of Lords rolled in. We have a wonderful tribal system. We tell them, "You have a tribal system in Africa. But we have one that is better." The Lords all get fetched up in fancy frocks and there are witch doctors and all the rest of it. They do not have to be elected. They are like tribal chiefs and they last for ever. If they are not lords, people can have a baronetcy and become a knight. What a joke. Yet the Government tell us that this is the mother of Parliaments and that we have to spread the system all over the world. Am I supposed to buy that?

Mrs. Chalker: This is not relevant to the debate.

Mr. Skinner: Everything that I am referring to is in response to what the Minister said in her opening speech. She talked about spreading this democracy.

Of course, the third world could have the royal family, too. Well I would be happy for it to have the royal family, but I am not too sure that the royals would want to go to the Third world. They might have to pay taxes if they went somewhere else.

Remarkably, the Minister gave advice on slum projects in India and Pakistan. What a cheek. The Government have developed cardboard city on a grand scale. There are thousands of homeless people in London littered round the streets and the stations. Yet the Minister comes here and says that she is telling the Indians and Pakistanis how to deal with the problem of slums. By God, the Indians and Pakistanis want some help with that problem, but the Government have a cheek to talk about solutions when they refuse to build public sector houses. Hardly any public sector houses have been built in the past few years with the result that all these people are without a roof over their heads.

I shall come to my last point because other hon. Members want to speak. It is about the environment. I detect that this entrepreneurial, market-forces Government are giving a nod and a wink to the third world and saying, "We have got problems with the ozone layer." The Government have just discovered that they cannot patch up the ozone layer with market forces. As I told the previous Prime Minister, that problem cannot be resolved with a man, a bike, a ladder and an enterprise allowance. It will have to be done by collective action.

What are the Government doing? We have caused the problems but they say to the third world, "For God's sake don't you cause that problem. We will tell you how not to create problems for the planet." What a cheek. All the industrialised nations, mainly in the northern, temperate zone have despoiled the planet and caused havoc. Now they have the cheek to go round the world pontificating and telling Third-world countries that they had better not do the same. The industrialised nations destroyed the rain forests and everything else to feed and look after people in this part of the world.

By and large the debate should have been headed "Hypocrisy by the Tory Government" because that is roughly what it was. My right hon. Friend the Member for Swansea, West referred to that earlier. The Government come here on a Friday and talk about giving peanuts to the people who are starving. Yet we are part of a group of nations including the Common Market, America, Japan and all the rest which, if it had the will and took collective action, could feed the people in Africa and all the other third-world countries. We could feed them 10 times over, but we would have to get rid of the capitalist system if we really wanted to do it well.

2.4 pm

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton): I endorse the comments of the previous two contributors to our debate. My hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), in his inimitable way, pointed to the double standards and hypocrisy surrounding the debate. He could have mentioned the so-called sweeteners from British Aerospace to Rover. That £80 million—nearly £1 billion—could have been transferred directly to the aid budget where it would have been put to much better use. Tribute has already been paid to my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) for his work for the Kurds. He consistently argues about the enormity of the disaster which faces the world and needs to be addressed, and his arguments are often ignored. The truth is that the underdeveloped world will face even more misery than it does now.

The debt problem has not been resolved. Interest repayments mean that the poor pay for the rich. Those repayments amount to more than $15 billion a year, which means lives lost. That money could be spent on food and the economy. Those debts should be written off. France has written off large chunks of debt. We have not and it is a scandal.

Mrs. Chalker: What about the £1 billion that has been written off?

Mr. Cohen: The Minister will have a chance to reply.

The recession will make matters much worse. Already developing countries are desperately worried about eastern Europe which, rightly, will need aid to feed its people, preserve its environment and build up the various national economies. The underdeveloped countries are worried that that will take aid from them. 1992 will mean protection barriers around the rich western European countries. That, too, will adversely affect the underdeveloped world.

One of the lesser obscenities in the Gulf crisis is the United States asking Saudi Arabia, Germany, Japan and other countries for money to pay for the war effort it is promoting there. In the end third-world countries are the most impoverished by what is happening in the Gulf.

On top of that we have foolish restrictions. I shall mention just one. The American war in Vietnam and the sanctions which it has effectively imposed worldwide have impoverished Vietnam. Vietnam has now found oil, which could save it. There is natural gas on top of the oil. Because of the stupid boycott which America is enforcing throughout the world, Vietnam will have to burn off the natural gas to reach the oil. That is a scandal. The Minister has said that aid arrangements to Vietnam are under review. They have been under review for ages. In the words of the Prime Minister, the Minister should be "her own woman" and tell the United States to scrap the stupid boycott.

I have just come back from a trip to Bangladesh. This is a historic time for it with the political upheavals and struggle for democracy which are taking place and which, I hope, will succeed. I shall mention the aid issues, not the political ones. Dhaka university needs an aid project to help it to improve education. Experts told us that there had not been exams for seven years—that in a country which is trying to establish compulsory schooling and which needs middle managers. There have been some brutal assaults on students of Dhaka university—just like those in Tiananmen square, but on a smaller scale. We should provide aid now, so that educational opportunities are improved at the university, in an attempt to stop such brutality. That funding is also vital for improving the country's infrastructure.

Aid should also be provided for the heritage of that country. The tribal people of the Chittagong hill tracts have suffered a mass migration as their way of life has been threatened. Worse is to come for those people, so we must preserve their culture.

We should establish business links with Bangladesh. The most important thing, however, is for the infrastructure to be improved so that there is proper sanitation—a comprehensive, modern sewerage system—and a plentiful supply of clean water. The profits from one day's arms trade could pay for clean water not just for Bangladesh, but everywhere. It is a scandal that that priority is slipping further down the agenda rather than remaining at the top.

Primary health care and hospital development should be funded in Bangladesh as the capitalist system in that poor country cannot provide for it. At this stage there is no profit to be gained from initiating such developments. One of the saddest things has been the spread of Thatcher's privatisation ethos to Bangladesh. The state has sought to disengage itself from its responsibilities and that has contributed to Bangladesh's decline. At best, privatisation is an absolute irrelevance to Bangladesh as it is elsewhere.

People in Bangladesh told me that the donor countries should monitor the provision of aid to ensure that there is no corruption. Rumours are rife about the misuse of funds, but I am sure that such corruption occurs in other countries. If donor countries provide such monitoring, however, the British Government, as a key donor, must take control and insist that there is no corruption and misuse of funds. They must take responsibility.

Aid must be linked to democratic development, especially in Bangladesh, where the army should be kept out of power. If that does not happen, aid should be stopped. We should seek to help that country's burgeoning democracy by offering to send observers from the Commonwealth, the European Parliament and the United Nations to ensure that its democracy can develop. The way forward for Bangladesh is through democracy and development.

2.12 pm

Mrs. Clwyd: With the leave of the House I shall speak again. One thing that this debate has proved has been hon. Members' anxiety to put their views on aid and development. We do not have enough opportunity to make our views known. Given that the Government do not have a heavy legislative programme for the new year, they should make prime time available—not an Adjournment debate—to debate this important issue. In the past year and a half the Government have not made available any time to debate it. All the time allocated has come from the Opposition because we give this subject its rightful priority.

My hon. Friends the Members for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody), for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle), for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn), for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) and for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) and my right hon. Friend the Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) spoke with great passion. However, the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) said that he detected a note of sourness in our speeches. Any sourness is due to the fact that we are angry because the Government have slashed aid to some of the poorest people in the world. In 1979, when Labour left office, Britain spent 0·51 per cent. of GNP on aid. We are angry because during the past 11 years under the Conservatives we have witnessed large cuts in aid. The Minister for Overseas Development has seen the level of aid drop to 0·32 per cent. of GNP. From being one of the most generous donors in Europe, we have become one of the most miserly, however the figures are presented, ranking 14th out of the 18 OECD countries. That is why Opposition Members feel strongly about it, and we are not afraid to say so.

The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford talked in emollient terms about the need to increase aid. We appreciate his concern for the third world, but throughout the years of Conservative rule he has allowed aid levels to fall. He has had every opportunity to defeat the Government on aid issues. I cannot recall many occasions when he has voted with the Opposition in an endeavour to increase British aid. He uses many nice words when speaking about British aid. No doubt he has used many more in the past 11 years trying to persuade the Government to increase the proportion of our GNP devoted to overseas aid. None of that has had any effect, to the point where today the aid budget is stagnant, however the figures are presented.

The Minister disagreed with some of the figures given by my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, West. He was talking about the budget in real terms, not in the terms in which the Minister will no doubt reply to the debate. No wonder we are angry, for we recall the former Prime Minister, the right hon. Member for Finchley (Mrs. Thatcher), saying in 1983 that when economic circumstances permitted, we would move towards the UN target of 0·7 per cent. of GNP going to overseas aid.

Last year the Government said that we had a higher standard of living than we had ever known. The problem is not that we cannot afford to give the third world more aid but that the Government do not want to give more. Had the Government maintained Labour's commitment to the third world from 1979 onwards, the third world would be better off by £8 billion.

The right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Sir D. Steel) spoke about the amounts spent on arms by the developing countries. Anyone who has been to Ethiopia must deplore the fact that 40 per cent. of its budget goes on military equipment.

Mr. Wells: The figure is 70 per cent.

Mrs. Clwyd: I hear the hon. Gentleman's intervention. If, like other Conservative Members who have spoken, he is serious about achieving the target of 0·7 per cent. of GNP, he should accept, with the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley), that the best way to get it is through a Labour Government.

All hon. Members, including Conservative Members, have talked about poverty in the third world. The Government cannot claim that the ODA targets the poorest people. After the Minister made that claim at the refugee conference, I asked her to set out the evidence on which it was based. She could say only that in India alone, £130 million went on poverty alleviation. But as she has revealed in countless written answers to me, India is the only country for which the ODA compiles statistics of aid devoted to poverty alleviation.

Many of my hon. Friends have spoken of the importance of tackling the debt problems of third-world countries. Developing countries cannot possibly grow their way out of the debt crisis as debt payments are made to the rich. Those sums totalled $52 billion last year. Debt repayments leave no money for investment in growth.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North said, Labour Members have been pushing for United Kingdom banks to contribute to debt relief by a change in the tax law. Some Labour Members tabled an amendment to that effect to the previous Finance Bill. At present banks receive tax relief on the provisions they set aside against bad third-world debts. They invest the subsidy at a hefty profit, but have no obligation to pass on any of the tax relief as debt relief, which is ridiculous and ludicrous. Tax relief in 1988, the latest year for which figures are available, is estimated at £1·7 billion—more than the entire aid budget. If hon. Members are serious about doing something to resolve the problem, they should have voted for our amendment to the Finance Bill.

I am anxious to hear the Minister's reply to our questions. The Opposition have definite proposals—we would like a White Paper on development and an educational initiative from the Government. We want the Government to adopt the World bank's constructive proposals on tackling poverty and we would particularly like them to raise the aid budget to 0·7 per cent. of the gross national product. However, I doubt whether any of those steps will be taken under this Government.

The Labour party's policy is clear: we intend to put the overseas aid portfolio in the Cabinet. That is why we were pushing so hard in our support for the Minister. We did so not because she is a woman but because she has considerable ability—none of us would take that away from her—and we want her and her portfolio to take their rightful place in the Cabinet, not merely to be an arm of the Foreign Office. If that were the case, as it will be under a Labour Government, overseas development will have its rightful place among the other Government Departments and we shall be able to argue much more vigorously for the needs of the third world than the Minister is able to do at present.

Mrs. Chalker: With the leave of the House, Mr. Deputy Speaker, until about 40 minutes ago I was going to say that we were having an interesting and worthwhile debate, and I shall concentrate on what happened during the first four hours of the debate.

I noted that the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) made a contribution from the Opposition Dispatch Box at the beginning of the debate. From his ranting and raving a few minutes ago, we might gather that that was a sign of how overseas policy will be put in future if the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) does not get on top of the problem, which means controlling the hon. Member for Bolsover.

The approach of the hon. Member for Cynon Valley to the challenging task of development and aid was, as ever, highly partial. It is not just a matter of money, but persuading recipient Governments to implement the critically necessary reforms. Proper use of aid money is essential and it has to be used imaginatively. That means encouraging developing countries' Governments to break away from their bureaucratic, old socialist ideas if they are to succeed. I did not see much evidence that many of the Opposition speakers had been able to break away from those bureaucratic, old socialist ideas.

As the excellent speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) clearly implied, if developing countries are to overcome their poverty, they must be able to attract investment and get on with their own business through firm economic reforms. If they do not do so, they will not be able to succeed, despite the Government helping them to do so.

There have been a number of strange comments about net resource transfers. Net flows to Africa are substantially positive. In 1989 the inflows to sub-saharan Africa exceeded outflows by $14 billion. Those are not my figures, but figures from the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. It is clear that the countries classified by the United Nations as the least developed are receiving more—$13 billion more—in new loans and grants than the interest and principal they repaid. This country has not only written off £1 billion of debts, but ensured that all our aid to the poorest countries is on grant terms.

Our thinking has moved on a long way since 1975—not 1978—when the Labour Government produced their White Paper. We have a development strategy, clearly outlined in the Government's reply to the Foreign Affairs Select Committee's report on bilateral aid in 1987. That set out our view on how best to secure sustainable growth. It also set out our concern about poverty. I and my predecessor have reiterated those ideas in speech after speech in the past five years.

The hon. Member for Cynon Valley suggested that our approach in the ODA to structural adjustment was out of tune with that of other donors. That is not true. It is a major achievement of the past five years that the thinking of the international community on adjustment issues has converged. The special programme of assistance to Africa shows how effectively those views have converged. I share the World bank president's view that efficient development must enable the poor to use their main asset—their labour. That is why we have supported price reforms that give peasant farmers the incentive to produce more, and why we argued for less protection so that countries plentiful in labour do not invest in capital-intensive socialist-style industries. It is also why we are financing slum improvement programmes with the help of local people who seek to help poor people to use their labour productively to generate greater income.

The hon. Members for Cynon Valley and for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) claimed that my colleagues in charge of other Government Departments were not concerned about the effect of their policies on development issues. They could not be more wrong. I have already made it clear that we are fully aware that international trade liberalisation is crucial for the developing countries.

The hon. Member for Cynon Valley also spoke about tied aid. The proportion of tied aid to total United Kingdom bilateral aid, which includes CDC and local costs, both of which are untied, has been about 70 per cent. over the past four years. The DAC average, about which the hon. Lady seemed pleased, is only 51 per cent.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford referred to the IMF and the World bank playing a leading role in negotiated reform programmes, which we support. We are prominent on those bodies' boards and we work hard to ensure that the reforms are properly and thoughtfully implemented. We know of the problems that some developing countries face because of debts to those organisations, but in general multilateral debt is only a small part of total developing country debt. For the poorer countries, for which multilateral debt is a problem, the IMF's enhanced structural adjustment facility provides the way forward. It is a £4·5 billion facility and it offers an interest rate of 0·5 per cent. As such it is one of the best ways of helping countries such as Guyana to get out of the difficulties that they have faced. The United Kingdom is the largest single contributor to the interest subsidy costs of the ESAF, but we are also seeking to help indebted countries by ensuring that all new World bank lending is on highly concessional terms. We must preserve the financial integrity of those institutions—that is in the interests of the whole developing world.

The House is well aware of our policy towards official debt. We have been generous; we have forgiven £1 billion in the past. But I want to make one more point about the Trinidad terms, which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister initiated when Chancellor. They would provide substantial debt relief for the poorest countries pursuing reform. I hope that we shall obtain the support of all the donor countries, including Japan, for the Trinidad terms initiative because it can do more than anything else to help those countries.

The right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Sir D. Steel) referred to the problems of private debt. He knows that we have supported the Brady plan, which allows IMF and World bank resources to be used directly for debt reduction in deals with private banks. Six countries have already benefited from that.

My hon Friend the Member for Reigate (Mr. Gardiner) made an interesting speech. I welcome the fact that the private sector—the CDC or any of the other organisations—plays a large part in helping the Third world. In most developing countries farmers are the largest private sector element and we seek to help them with training, better seeds and better crops.

Good government has two dimensions, political and economic. We are making it quite clear to every recipient country what we expect in terms of human rights and good government. We are encouraging countries in which things have been wrong in the past to put them right. We welcome Zambia's decision to adopt multi-party political systems. My hon. Friends are right to say that Zambia has a long way to go with its economy, but it is critical for us to help Zambia to do the right thing. We do that by training its judges and policemen and by helping it to have the right sort of organisations. Not only will the people of Zambia learn from us, but the country will have a better outlook.

It being half-past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

The Borders (Rural Policy)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Kirkhope.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Archy Kirkwood (Roxburgh and Berwickshire): I invite the House to turn from the urgent need for action on overseas development to the need for action on rural issues in the United Kingdom and in particular in the Borders. I hope to illustrate the need for a more co-ordinated Government approach to rural development in the Borders, but the argument can be extended and a similar case made for other landward areas of Scotland furth of the highlands and islands. Some may argue that it could also be extended to the Highlands and Islands development board because the landward areas in the whole of Scotland require urgent examination from time to time. Since 1979 that task has not been addressed with sufficient urgency by the Government.

The Borders covers an area of 1,820 sq m. It has a population of 102,000 and is therefore one of the most sparsely populated regions in Europe with an average of 122 people per sq km. Interestingly, that compares with the average figure for Scotland of 65, a United Kingdom average of 231 and a European Community average of 142 people per sq km. The dispersal of population affects every aspect of public policy. It affects transport in terms of access and cost, the provision of education, and especially the provision of adequate primary schools in rural areas. It has consequences for the cost of living, given the increased costs of transport and other factors.

The rate of pay in manufacturing industries in the Borders is low. The dispersal of population also affects social work provision, planning development and housing. The provision of services in the area cannot ignore that spread of population and the difficulties of topography and geography.

Sir David Steel (Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale): My hon. Friend's argument was given further weight by this week's report from Shelter, which campaigns for the homeless, saying that homelessness has risen faster in the rural areas of Scotland than in the urban areas because of the lack of rented housing.

Mr. Kirkwood: I am grateful to my right hon. Friend, who succinctly raises a matter that I intended to mention. It is worrying that problems which were previously considered urban are now being visited on people in rural areas. The Government will ignore that at their cost. Anyone who sets out to paint a fairly bleak picture of the Borders would not have to look far for evidence to suggest that things could get extremely bad.

Agriculture is currently facing a great deal of uncertainty. The Borders have less-favoured area status and receive special provision. The livestock sector in the Borders is suffering great uncertainty and has experienced substantial reductions in net farm incomes over the past 12 months. We are apprehensive about the hill farm review, which is due out in the next few weeks and may be able to do something about that problem. In the short term, the Government should increase support in the hill livestock compensatory allowance for the livestock industry so that it can see its way through to next year, never mind the years beyond. The arable sector is also waiting with bated breath to learn its fate at the hands of the GATT negotiations. That is a changing situation. The talks broke down last week and are to be resumed next year, but there is a widespread feeling that the Government were all too willing to sell the industry short. Despite the position taken by British Ministers, the EC Commissioner for agriculture, Mr. MacSharry, has bought some valuable extra time to ensure that a living can be made in the arable sector.

It is not an exaggeration to say that if farmers cannot make a living in areas like the Borders, those areas cannot prosper, farming will suffer, and the whole rural economy in the landward areas of Scotland will be in danger of collapse. The importance of a sustainable agricultural sector in such areas cannot be overstated. If agriculture were to fail, the consequences would be great. The same can be said of the future of the fishing industry. The coastal communities that I represent on the eastern seaboard of Berwickshire are uncertain about their future. Towns like Eyemouth depend on the continuing prosperity of the catching sector of the inshore fleet and on the onshore processing industry. They ask me what future they are likely to have. Even now, the community is considering greater restraints on the fishing industry for 1991. The total allowable catches may be cut, the capacity of the fleet may be cut and the supplies of raw material to the fish processors will decrease so much that it will make it almost impossible for them to plan processing profitably unless they turn to fish imported from Canada, Iceland and elsewhere.

The fishing and agriculture sectors are under much pressure and the textile industry is facing a testing time. The Minister will know that in the past few weeks, three factories in Hawick in my constituency have closed, with the loss of hundreds of jobs. The latest is the closure, announced yesterday, of Hawick Co, with the loss of 80 jobs. The textile industry is trying to cope with difficult circumstances, including climate changes, changes in fashion and style, increases in the price of raw materials, high interest rates and fluctuating exchange rates. It is waiting with bated breath to learn what agreement, if any, the GATT round will achieve in the transitional phasing-out of the multi-fibre arrangement, linkage of strengthened rules and disciplines within the new negotiating process in the GATT talks and the all-important access that it needs to third-country markets. In addition, the electronics industry is experiencing ever-greater pressure from overseas suppliers and is having to contend with high interest rates and fluctuating exchange rates.

The future does not look good in terms of the established, stable base and methods of producing wealth, creating employment and sustaining jobs in the Borders. A gloomy picture could be painted, but, while none of that is scaremongering and all of it is realistic, the future need not be grim. With a fair wind and sensitive support from central Government, working in co-ordination with the local authorities, the future of the Borders could be rosy. I do not want to denigrate the Government's provisions. They have put extra money into roads and electrifying the east-coast route, and into other departmental budgets in a helpful way. Unless there is a more co-ordinated approach to the way that the problems interface in a rural area as disparate as the Borders, the future will be more bleak than it need be.

We must remember that since 1979 there has been a systematic withdrawal by central Government of a whole series of regional support measures. The start of the withdrawal of assisted area status began in 1979, and it was eventually phased out in August 1982. If that package of regional support existed today, the job creation capacity and potential of the Borders region would have been much greater. In support of that agreement, I quote evidence produced by the Industry Department for Scotland in a research paper published in July 1988. It concluded:

"Had the package remained in effect, the study area would contain more enterprises better able to compete and provide more jobs than they are likely to do."

I subscribe strongly to that view.

The Borders region no longer has any sort of development status, and potentially serious consequences flow from that. We are no longer eligible for any assistance from the European regional development fund in Brussels. In April 1985 we lost priority status for the European social fund, so we are denied access to that potential source of assistance. We have no access to any structural fund, although I am aware that there are discussions about the criteria for that. We made an application the last time the list was published for the areas that were eligible, but the Borders region was not accepted for that initial list. We shall continue to argue that we should be on the list. Almost by definition, we do not have access to urban aid and the systems of support that are used to great effect in the central industrial belt of Scotland.

The main justification for removing assisted area status, which has left us with no assistance at all, appears to be based on the fact that the Borders region has relatively low unemployment. The Government must reconsider the criteria for determining which areas are suitable for assistance. There is an acute shortage of officially published statistics for rural areas. There is no accepted series of statistics and data that have any appreciation of rural factors and indicators. The latest example of that, which has caused much public discussion, is that the Department of Employment has been unable to tell us the average income in the Borders region. I understand that there are technical problems because the Department does not have a large enough base from which to draw the data. That means that the Borders region is the only mainland region that does not have access to figures showing the average net income figure. It leaves the Government in a difficult position when trying to judge whether the Borders region is eligible for the different sorts of assistance. The Government are relatively ignorant of rural problems, as are associated public bodies and agencies.

The SDA has done much valuable work in terms of environmental improvements and support services, but there have been great constraints on the economic instruments that it has been able to use in rural areas, particularly in the Borders. For example, the valuable scheme to sponsor the development of rural workshops, which provided conversion grants for rural properties so that they could be transformed into industrial premises, has been withdrawn. I emphasise the potential in the Borders for local enterprise companies, and I certainly wish them well. However, when Scottish Natural Heritage starts in April, it might be much more effective if Government and EEC funding were made available to it.

There is concern about incomes in the Borders, but I have already referred to that in passing and will not dwell on the point. My right hon. Friend the Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Sir D. Steel) talked about housing, and I wanted to mention the increasing homelessness that we have been suffering recently. Access to transport is also a great problem, particularly for those living in the Borders region, and I cannot see it getting better.

I say in a non-partisan way that the Government must confront the cost of fuel and, for environmental reasons, they must impose constraints on the extent to which people use petrol and diesel. That will create major problems for people living in disparate areas. Under a simple price mechanism, some people will have to pay through the nose. A solution that might suit Trafalgar square could be unacceptable in the Borders.

Does the Minister acknowledge that rural needs cannot be measured simply by unemployment rates, and will he take other indicators, such as income levels, into account in the future? Does he accept the need for a rural areas strategy, with proper co-ordination of all Government agencies? Does he accept that the programmes of publicly funded rural workshops and factories are essential if jobs are to be created? Does he acknowledge the vital importance of the social aspect of the economic work of the LECs and other agencies? Community facilities are just as important as economic measures in rural areas. Finally, does the Minister accept that local authorities and rural voluntary agencies have a continuing and vital role in providing a successful rural development programme in the Borders and elsewhere?

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland (Lord James Douglas-Hamilton): I congratulate the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on his success in achieving this Adjournment debate. It feels like an annual progress report, because the hon. Gentleman's previous debate was on 28 July 1989. Nevertheless, I am glad to respond today.

The right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Sir D. Steel)—who had to rush off for another engagement—mentioned housing. We have put in place Scottish Homes' rural strategy, and all aspects relating to rural areas, including homelessness, will be addressed. Also, the Tweedbank development will assist in the provision of housing for rent in the central Borders. That is another major project under way by Scottish Homes. I strongly recommend that the councils keep in close touch, which I am sure they will.

I am aware of the redundancies mentioned by the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, but there is also good news. Slumberdown International of Hawick has announced a £2·5 million joint venture that will provide 40 new jobs immediately and 100 over the next two or three years, which is encouraging. As to Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale, Shanks and MacEwan has won orders worth £51 million, most of them concerned with road and bridge building works, and other new book orders are worth £4·5 million. One must take the whole picture into account.

I pay tribute to Borders regional council, which has taken a far-sighted attitude to the region's development. It mounted a three-day conference, "Rural Development: Future Strategies", at which the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale and I both spoke. That conference and the comments made by the Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire today suggest that there is a considerable consensus on what requires to be done to secure the future of rural communities, especially the Borders.

We might identify three main elements of that consensus. First, we agree that development must be sustainable, meaning that the local community and its culture should, if at all possible, be enhanced by development and certainly not damaged. Secondly, decisions should be made by local people. They are aware of the particular opportunities available to the community, and the strengths of the community, which can be exploited to the advantage of all who live there. Thirdly, there should be a co-ordinated framework of policies within which those decisions can be made. I shall return to that point in a moment.

We believe that the Scottish Office has taken significant steps to ensure that those elements are in place. At the end of his speech on 28 July the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire gave me a stern warning that he wished to see a strategy for rural development. We have done much since then towards developing that aim. The Secretary of State gave me the task of co-ordinating our policies for rural areas and I have adopted the following objectives:

"To establish a coherent and integrated policy framework within which those who live in rural areas can derive improving standards and quality of living by using the local resource base in a sustainable way while maintaining the environment."

Within the Scottish Development Department I have a small but high-powered team assisting in that task. I am watching all the policy initiatives within the Scottish Office to ensure that they conform to the ideas set out in that aim. Other departments and bodies, such as the Forestry Commission, the Countryside Commission for Scotland, the Nature Conservancy Council, the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands development board are aware of the vital need for a co-ordinated response and approach.

I recognise that there are continuing calls for the Government to set out a rural strategy. Such calls suggest that it is possible and sensible to identify common features in rural areas in all parts of Scotland. In many ways that is a difficult task. While rural areas share the characteristics of low population density and an economy in which agriculture figures large, they have as many features that differentiate them as those that join them. The highlands of Scotland and the Borders are both rural areas, but obviously have different outlooks. In my view, the right approach is to establish a unified policy framework, involving not only Scottish Homes but local enterprise companies and Scottish Natural Heritage, each of those bodies with a local network working closely in co-operation with local authorities. In other words, since our previous debate we have been thinking of developments and developing strategies to meet the needs at local level.

For those reasons we have placed an emphasis on creating enabling frameworks, so that local people can tackle the issues facing their areas in their own ways. The local enterprise companies which are now being set up, will provide the ideal medium for grasping local employment and training opportunities. We made it clear to Scottish Enterprise that we expected to develop strategies appropriate to rural areas, in consultation with the local enterprise companies. Most of the activities will be undertaken by local enterprise companies, in partnership with local communities, to identify the needs, opportunities and priorities for their areas. To help them achieve that, local enterprise companies will have a significant amount of delegated responsibility to commit public expenditure—up to £250,000 on any one project—and discretion to devise specific initiatives to stimulate development, reflecting local circumstances. We believe that that local involvement is the best way to stimulate development in the rural, as well as the urban areas. Scottish Enterprise and the local enterprise companies will ensure that appropriate account is taken of rural communities. We expect that local enterprise companies will provide assistance and advice tailored to the needs of their areas.

Locally based help will also be available from the new bodies that we have set up and those to come. The new Scottish Natural Heritage body is at present being considered in another place. When it begins operations in April 1992, it will have a network of local offices that will enable a sensitive and practical approach to be developed at local level. It will operate in partnership with the many bodies having an interest in the natural heritage, which is a major concern in rural areas. It will create better opportunities for positive action in the use and management of Scotland's natural heritage, and it will seek to promote the sustainable use of that heritage.

In housing, too, Scottish Homes has been active in considering the interests of rural areas. From its beginning, it has adopted a devolved system of offices and a matching system of devolved decision-making. The hon. Gentleman will recall pressing such ideas in Committee on the Bill setting up Scottish Homes. We agreed that this was the way forward. Recently, Scottish Homes published its rural housing strategy, which will be fundamental to matching up housing provision to the needs of the rural community.

I am pleased that we have been able to approve the general thrust of the Scottish Homes' rural housing strategy. I accept that in some areas the scale of need may be such that grants are required on a small scale. I have also been able to approve the proposals for grants to individuals and to make such adjustments as were required to the guidance on planning controls. Further work is required on some of the issues identified during the consultation period, but I am confident that the funds that we were able to provide will mean that there is no delay in beginning action now to improve the housing conditions of many people in rural areas. The Scottish Homes' district plan for the Borders will help identify priorities across the housing spectrum. I am, in particular, pleased that a major central Borders project is under way—the Tweedbank development, which I mentioned previously.

In common with a number of successful Scottish rural areas, the population of the Borders is growing. Between 1971 and 1989, the Borders region grew by 4·7 per cent. while Scotland as a whole showed a reduction in the population of 2·8 per cent. The flight to the cities has been stopped and reversed. Over the same period, the Berwickshire and Tweeddale districts grew by over 11 per cent. People now recognise that life in rural areas has attractions, and not just for "get away from it all" city folk. Happily, local people now tend to stay as opportunities for employment grow and that benefits everyone.

The level of unemployment in the Borders has consistently been well below the rate for Scotland. It peaked in 1987 and now lies at 3·5 per cent. compared with 7·7 per cent. for Scotland as a whole. Within the Borders, rates are as low as 2·9 per cent. in the Galashiels travel-to-work area. After a period of decline, the Borders region has performed much better than many other parts of Scotland, as measured by a range of economic indicators. Borders industries have shown themselves well able to weather downturns and to do so better than their counterparts in more industrialised areas. New industries have come, but the area still depends for much of its prosperity on traditional agriculture, wool textiles and knitwear. The way forward must lie in seeking to build on the base that the traditional industries provide and to diversify, exploiting the natural resources of the area in skills and in the natural heritage.

The twin elements of skills and natural heritage are well used in tourism, which is and will continue to be important to the development of the Borders economy. Many visitors pass through the area, although I acknowledge that a good proportion of them are heading further north. A key aim for the tourist industry must be to entice more of those visitors to stop in the Borders, to stay longer and to spend more. While the natural beauty of the area may be enough for some, others need more facilities and attractions to persuade them to stay. The Scottish Office very much supports the efforts of the Scottish tourist board to encourage new developments with advice and, where necessary, financial assistance. Marketing, too, is essential. I am delighted that the Scottish Borders tourist board, as part of a consortium of southern Scottish tourist boards, recently launched a car touring guide aimed at the European market. I am sure that that initiative, which was supported by the national tourist agencies, will give a significant boost to the number of foreign visitors to the area.

With Europe in mind, I should mention the Government's continuing efforts to secure eligibility of the Borders for European Community support under objective 5(b). We put forward a strong case to the Commission in 1989. It is disappointing that the Commission has not been able to offer a positive response. We shall continue to press the case whenever the opportunity arises for a further review of eligibility.

While tourists appreciate the open roads and scenic routes of the Borders, local people are rightly concerned, as the hon. Gentleman suggested, with local transport. Our bus policy was to promote sustained and fair competition in the interests of the bus user. The hon. Gentleman came to see me on that subject. He will be pleased to hear that the local management-employee buy-out team was successful and that Lowland Scottish Omnibuses Ltd. is locally owned and operated extremely successfully.

Forestry is a major industry in the Borders, and I have said on previous occasions that I believe that it provides many opportunities for invigorating the economy of the Borders. To take best advantage of sometimes remote forests, we have to provide access roads and the Government have been generous to the Borders regional council in giving it substantial enhancements to its capital allocations for that purpose. Those allocations demonstrate our commitment to providing the quality of roads required for the extraction of timber. The council's programme, as agreed with the Forestry Commission, will be taken fully into account in determining capital consents for future years. Those will, of course, be assessed in light of the overall resources available for allocation.

I shall study the hon. Gentleman's speech with great care. If there are several points that have not been dealt with fully in my response, I shall make sure that I write to him about them.

The motion having been made at half-past Two o'clock and the debate having continued for half an hour, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to the Standing Order.

Adjourned at Three o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 3 December 1990

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Jamaica

38. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Minister for Overseas Development next plans to visit Jamaica to discuss third-world deprivation.

Mrs. Chalker: I have no plans at present to visit Jamaica, but I hope to do so.

Cambodia

40. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for development aid to Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government are providing humanitarian assistance to Cambodia by supporting the activities of British non-governmental organisations and United Nations agencies inside Cambodia and in the camps along the Thai border. We are ready to consider how Cambodia's needs for help with repatriation, reconstruction and development might best be met in the context of a comprehensive political settlement.

Amazon Rain Forests

41. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's participation in the efforts to save the Amazon rain forests.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom is supporting a comprehensive approach towards protection of the Amazonian rain forests both by seeking reforms of the tropical forestry action plan and by helping in specific countries. We already have projects in place in Brazil, Ecuador and Bolivia.

Bulgaria

42. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding United Kingdom aid to Bulgaria.

Mrs. Chalker: Bulgaria will become eligible for support from the know-how fund once the new Government have shown their firm commitment to economic and political reform, as we hope they soon will. We are already contributing to humanitarian aid through the Community's PHARE programme. We have encouraged the Commission to consider urgently Bulgarian requests for food assistance.

Hungary

44. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals there are in Hungary to use the know-how funds to assist in the privatisation of industry.

Mrs. Chalker: We have provided two British advisers for the State Property Agency in Hungary, which manages the privatisation process. We are also discussing proposals with their Ministry of Industry for British consultants to assist in restructuring companies prior to their sale.

Sri Lanka

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the items included in the reconstruction work being undertaken in Sri Lanka, to which Her Majesty's Government have pledged £20 million.

Mrs. Chalker: About £11 million of the £20 million reconstruction grant has so far been allocated to the projects listed below. Of this, about £6·5 million has been spent. Implementation of a number of agreed projects, and allocation of the remaining £9 million, has been delayed by the renewed civil conflict.

Completed Projects

40 reconditioned buses for Sri Lanka Transport Board
Rails and fittings for Sri Lanka Railways
Vehicles and road maintenance equipment for the Ministry of Rehabilitation Equipment for Roads Development Authority's field laboratories

Continuing Projects

Tractors for Ministry of Rehabilitation for use by farmers in Trincomalee district
Equipment for Jaffna university
Equipment for hospitals in Jaffna area
Support for humanitarian and relief activities of British and Sri Lankan NGOs
Furniture and equipment for schools in eastern areas

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the governmental and non-governmental organisations in Sri Lanka that received aid from the British Government in 1988 and 1989.

Mrs. Chalker: A wide range of governmental organisations in Sri Lanka benefited from the projects and training financed from our aid programme in the years in question. A complete list could be produced only at disproportionate cost. We also provided direct assistance to one Sri Lankan non-governmental organisation, Sarvodaya, and to a number of British non-governmental organisations operating in Sri Lanka.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total value of aid given to Sri Lanka; and what proportion is paid to (a) governmental agencies and (b) non-governmental agencies for 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mrs. Chalker: Gross British bilateral aid, including capital aid, technical assistance debt relief, assistance under the aid and trade provision emergency aid, joint funding of non-governmental organisations' projects, and investment by the Commonwealth Development Corporation (CDC) totalled £22 million in 1988 and £23·5 million in 1989.

An exact breakdown of these totals between governmental and non-governmental organisations (NGOs) could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, aid provided through British and Sri Lankan NGOs under our joint funding schemes, from our disaster and refugee unit and bilateral technical assistance programme amounted to about £0·7 million in 1988 and £1·5 million in 1989.

It is not yet possible to provide equivalent figures for 1990.

Third-world Countries (Debt)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning Her Majesty's Government's policy on debt failures by third-world countries.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government have taken the lead in international efforts to provide debt relief for the poorest countries. We are currently seeking the support of other creditors for the Chancellor of the Exchequer's recent "Trinidad initiative", which would involve a reduction of two thirds in the bilateral debt of the eligible countries.

We welcome the increasing willingness of banks to negotiate reductions in the debt owed to them, mainly by middle-income countries. We support the decision taken last year to allow the IMF and World bank to provide financial support for voluntarily negotiated debt reduction agreements, and are contributing our share of the necessary resources.

Lasting recovery from debt problems will depend on the pursuit of sound economic policies in indebted countries. The Government therefore believe that international assistance should be directed to countries implementing economic reforms.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Minister for Overseas Development next expects to meet other countries' Ministers to discuss third-world problems, including indebtedness; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I meet regularly with my counterparts from other countries to discuss these issues.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps the Government are taking to improve the energy efficiency of pensioner and low-income households.

Mr. Wakeham: The new home energy efficiency scheme, which will come into operation on 1 January 1991 is aimed specifically at low-income households. Its primary purpose is to increase the take-up of basic energy efficiency measures and to provide advice on ways in which those on low incomes can use energy more efficiently.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Birmingham Pub Bombings

31. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General when a date will be set for the hearing of the appeal of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings; and if he will make a statement.

35. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects a date to be set for the appeal of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Listing is a matter for the Court of Appeal. Listing of the case can be expected as soon as the grounds for appeal on behalf of six appellants have been lodged and the Crown has had an opportunity to consider them.

May Inquiry

32. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Attorney-General when he last met the Director of Public Prosecutions to discuss progress of the May inquiry.

The Attorney-General: I last met the Director of Public Prosecutions on 9 November, when we discussed matters of departmental interest. The subjects discussed on these occasions are not made public.

Legal Aid

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General for the last five years for which figures are available what has been the cost of legal aid for criminal cases in the Crown court (a) in total, (b) paid to solicitors and (c) paid to counsel.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is as follows:

£ million

	Amounts paid to solicitors	Amounts paid to counsel	Total paid
1985-86	36·360	38·932	75·292
1986-87	42·601	49·226	91·827
1987-88	47·591	52·494	100·086
1988-89	52·591	66·706	119·297
1989-90	[1]59·193	75·762	134·956

Negligence Payments

Mr. Fry: To ask the Attorney-General if he will consider producing guidelines for Her Majesty's judges to allow structured payments to be ordered in cases where damages are awarded to victims of negligence by health authorities.

The Attorney-General: It is for the judiciary themselves to develop guidelines for damages.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people receive severe disability premium (a) nationally and (b) in those departmental areas covering Islington; and how many people receive income support and attendance allowance but do not receive severe disability premium (i) nationally and (ii) in those departmental areas covering Islington.

Mr. Scott: In May 1989, it is estimated that the severe disability premium was included in the benefit calculation of some 70,000 claimants to income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit. At that time some 187,000 claimants in receipt of income support and attendance allowance did not have the severe disability premium. A number of these people would have been refused the premium because someone was getting invalid care allowance in respect of their care; and special benefit calculation rules apply to certain groups such as people in residential care and nursing homes.

Information for Islington is not available.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received from small business organisations regarding his plans to review statutory sick pay reimbursement regulations.

Mr. Scott: Such representations have been received from the following organisations representing small businesses.

National Federation of Self Employed and Small Businesses;
National Farmers Union;
The National Chamber of Trade;
The Retail Consortium;
The Union of Independent Companies;
The Electrical Contractors' Association.

Representations have also been received from the Confederation of British Industries and the Employers Engineering Federation, which will have small businesses within their membership.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has estimated the cost to business of moving to 80 per cent. reimbursement of statutory sick pay to business.

Mr. Scott: The proposals in the Statutory Sick Pay Bill reducing the amount of statutory sick pay (SSP) which employers can recover from 100 per cent. to 80 per cent. will produce savings in public expenditure of £181 million in 1991-92, rising to £190 million in 1992-93 and £197 million in 1993-94. In addition, the ending of the additional amount (currently 7 per cent.) which employers can recover as compensation for the national insurance contributions payable on statutory sick pay itself will result in an increase in national insurance income of £71 million, £75 million and £78 million in the three respective years.

My right hon. Friend has also announced reductions in employers' national insurance contributions, which will operate from the same date as the statutory sick pay changes. These are worth some £250 million to employers and have been particularly weighted to help small businesses. They will go a long way towards reducing the extra costs for employers of the statutory sick pay changes and in some cases totally offset them.

The precise effect of the combined statutory sick pay/National Insurance contributions package on individual businesses will depend on the sickness experience and pay levels within their work force, but bearing in mind both the contribution reductions and the fact that most spells of statutory sick pay are over very quickly—the average period is three weeks and 90 per cent. are over within eight weeks—the extra cost for small employers is not expected to be significant.

Attendance and Mobility Allowances

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for each year from 1979 what was the number of awards in payment for the mobility allowance; what was the number of reviews called for by (a) the recipient and (b) persons other than the recipient; what was the number of such reviews that led to the mobility allowance being withdrawn; and what was the number of such withdrawals as percentages of the number of allowances reviewed and of the total number of allowances in payment.

Mr. Scott: Information on the results of reviews called for by the mobility allowance recipient is not available. Nor is any information on reviews available prior to 1985. The remainder of the information requested is set out in the tables.

Year	Number of awards in payment[1]

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for each year from 1979 for (a) the attendance allowance at the higher rate and (b) the attendance allowance at the lower rate, what was the number of awards in payment; what was the number of reviews called for by (i) the recipient and (ii) persons other than the recipient; how many of each such reviews led to (1) the higher rate attendance allowance being replaced by the lower rate allowance and (2) the attendance allowance being withdrawn completely; what was the number of such reductions as percentages of the number of allowances reviewed and of the total number of allowances in payment; and what was the number of such complete withdrawals as percentages of the number of allowances reviewed and of the total number of allowances in payment.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available, but such information as is available is in the tables.

[1] A successful review is one where there is a resulting increase in benefit.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what events not set in train by a recipient trigger a review of the attendance and mobility allowances.

Mr. Scott: There may be a review at any time if there is evidence to suggest that a recipient's circumstances have changed.

Mrs. Rosalind Mackworth

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he intends to reappoint Mrs. Rosalind Mackworth as social fund commissioner when her present appointment expires on 30 November.

Mr. Scott: I am pleased that Mrs. Rosalind Mackworth has agreed to continue to serve as social fund commissioner for a period of three years from 1 December 1990. I understand that Mrs. Mackworth has also agreed to act as commissioner for Northern Ireland for the same period.

NATIONAL FINANCE

North Sea Oil

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions the Inland Revenue have had with offshore operators about whether the cost of safety improvements to North sea oil production platforms subsequent to the technical report of the Department of Energy and the Cullen report into the Piper Alpha disaster may be offset by oil companies against petroleum revenue tax.

Mr. Maples: The Inland Revenue has had no discussions with oil industry representatives specifically on the likely tax treatment of future safety improvements made in accordance with these reports.

Privatisation Advisers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras of 23 November 1990, Official Report, column 233, whether in assessing the suitability of firms to act as privatisation advisers he has access to the unpublished reports of the Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Maude: The Treasury is a competent authority for the purposes of the relevant provisions of the Companies Act 1985, and therefore has access to information obtained under that Act. As regards the suitability of firms to act as privatisation advisers, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 13 November in column 112.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Missing People

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many (a) children and (b) adults are known to have gone missing in the Metropolitan police district in each month of the past two years for which records are available; and how many were subsequently traced (i) within one week, (ii) within one month, (iii) within three months, (iv) within six months and (v) not for over six months of report.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not possible to give monthly figures in relation to persons reported missing in the Metropolitan police district, and statistical information is not kept regarding the periods of time within which missing persons are traced. However, the following annual figures are given in relation to persons reported missing in the Metropolitan police district in 1988 and 1989.

Males:
Under 14 years	486	2,955
14 to 17 years	937	5,661
18 years +	2,710	4,566
Females:
Under 14 years	421	1,587
14 to 17 years	1,091	6,078
18 years +	2,500	4,413
Total	8,145	25,260

Of the 8,145 persons reported missing during 1988, 1,075 were shown centrally as being still missing at the end of the year. Of the 25,260 persons reported missing during 1989, 315 were still missing at the end of the year.

The figures for 1989 are not comparable with those of previous years owing to new recording procedures having been introduced.

Figures for 1990 are not yet available.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many inquiries the Metropolitan police received from other forces in respect of missing persons during the last year for which records are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total number of missing persons reports received by the Metropolitan police from other forces during 1989 was 6,913. Figures for 1990 are not yet available.

Neighbourhood Watch

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current number of neighbourhood watch schemes in Wales.

Mr. John Patten: At the end of October 1990, there were estimated to be in the region of 3,450 schemes in Wales, covering over 83,000 households.

Court Psychiatric Schemes

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many justices' clerks have implemented, or are in the process of implementing, the recommendations contained in HO circular 66/90 concerning the establishment, together with other local agencies, of court psychiatric assessment arrangements or schemes.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available. We are, however, considering a number of ways in which implementation of the circular's recommendations might be monitored.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will update his answer of 25 October, Official Report, columns 262-64, to list the outstanding cases to October in each category of (a) naturalisation, (b) registration, (c) general immigration casework and (d) asylum and related casework.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of outstanding cases relates to casework in B1 and B4 divisions in the immigration and nationality department and is as follows:

Outstanding cases: October

	Number
Naturalisation[1]	63,553
Registration[1]	24,485
General immigration casework[1 2]	20,910
Asylum and related casework[1 3]	29,936

[1] Does not include applications received in the Department but which await allocation to caseworkers.

[2] Includes referred entry clearance applications, and inquiries submitted by letter, as well as variation of leave cases. Includes both general and eastern European casework (the latter was absorbed into general casework in July 1990).

[3] These figures are a total of all work outstanding in the refugee unit.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider amending court regulations in order to broaden the range of people who can speak on behalf of defendants in community charge cases.

Mr. John Patten: Section 22 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 permits a party to any proceedings by a magistrates court to be represented by counsel or a solicitor. In addition, the courts have a discretion to allow someone else to act on behalf of a party. We have no plans to change the law.

House of Lords (Reform)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals to reform the House of Lords.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No.

Constitution and Bill of Rights

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals for (a) a written constitution and (b) a Bill of Rights.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals to ensure a separation of powers within the British constitution.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No.

Victim Support Schemes

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the funding of victim support schemes in Greater Manchester, and Stockport in particular.

Mr. John Patten: We have received one letter from the Greater Manchester Federation of Victim Support expressing concern about the proposed withdrawal by local authorities of funding for victim support schemes in Greater Manchester. Home Office grant, which is administered by the funding panel of the national charity Victim Support, stands at £4·5 million this year and will rise by 20 per cent. to £5·4 million next year, subject to parliamentary approval. Local schemes may apply to the funding panel for new or extra grant under criteria reviewed annually, which are designed to ensure that the grant is distributed fairly and to best effect throughout England and Wales.

Helicopters

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he gives to chief constables and to the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis about the circumstances under which it is reasonable to use a helicopter in residential areas (a) during the day and (b) at night.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Police air operations are subject to safety rules and regulations made under the Civil Aviation Act 1982 and enforced by the Civil Aviation Authority. These specify minimum heights and closeness to high objects or buildings at which helicopters may fly over congested areas during the day and at night. Responsibility for the safe operation of police helicopters rests with chief police officers or the companies they employ to provide air services.

Special Constables

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has reached a decision on the introduction of a bounty for special constables.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have decided to authorise pilot projects allowing the payment of a bounty for special constables. This will be subject to amending the Special Constabulary Regulations 1965. Payment of the bounty on an experimental basis will take place in the Metropolitan police district and perhaps two provincial forces to test different types of scheme. The experiment will run for two years initially and its effect on recruitment and retention will be assessed before decisions are taken on the longer-term future of the bounty.

Young Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) further to paragraph 822 of the White Paper, "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public", if he will set out his policies with respect to abolition of certification of unruly behaviour;

(2) further to paragraph 822 of the White Paper, "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public", if he will place a copy of his consultative document in the Library;

(3) what new proposals he has in respect of young people aged 15 and 16 years in regard to remand and to the provisions of the Bail Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answers 29 and 30 November 1990]: It remains our intention to publish a consultation paper setting out detailed proposals for reforming the arrangements for the remand of alleged juvenile offenders, including the abolition of the unruliness certification procedure. I shall arrange for a copy of the consultation paper to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will make it his policy to create a clear separation at the age of 16 years so that young people aged 16 and 17 years are dealt with by the new youth court but children aged 10 to 16 years are dealt with either by a separate juvenile court or by separate sittings of a youth court;

(2) what is his latest policy for setting the lower age limit in respect of young people being brought before the proposed youth courts;

(3) whether he will make it his policy that magistrates' courts should so structure their operations as to deal separately with children aged under 14 years and those who are aged 14-plus.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 29 and 30 November 1990]: The jurisdiction of the proposed youth court, to be introduced by the Criminal Justice Bill, will include young people aged 10 to 17 inclusive who are charged with criminal offences. Within each youth court listing arrangements will be a matter for the justices' clerk to determine.

Democratic Accountability

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals Her Majesty's Government have (a) to increase democratic accountability to Parliament and (b) to improve the facilities available to hon. Members better to carry out their duties.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: If the hon. Gentleman has any specific points or proposals for improvement in mind, the Government will, as always, be happy to consider them.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farm Conservation Grants

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been allocated for the farm conservation grant scheme for (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91 and (c) 1991-92; how much has been taken up in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In England for the 1989-90 financial year, £9 million was allocated for the farm and conservation grant scheme and £6,029,000 was spent. For the 1990-91 financial year, £23,230,000 was allocated and expenditure to the end of October was £10,821,000. Expenditure in the latter half of the financial year is traditionally higher than in the first half and we do not expect a significant underspend this year. The planned allocation for 1991-92 is £22,926,000.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether grant aid is available under the farm conservation grant scheme to cover the costs incurred as a result of reinforcement of the electricity supply due to the installation of new pollution control equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: No, these grants are targeted on equipment to treat, handle and store waste. The very generous 50 per cent. grant is higher than the EC norm and was only approved by the EC Commission because it did not cover ancillary items. A widening of the grant would therefore have to be offset by a cut in grant rates or withdrawal of grant from other farm waste investments.

Coast Protection Act

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now make it his policy to undertake a review into the workings of the Coast Protection Act 1949.

Mr. Curry: I have no plans to undertake a review into the workings of the Coast Protection Act 1949.

Food Irradiation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to lay the regulations which will allow the introduction of food irradiation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I intend to lay the Food (Control of Irradiation) Regulations 1990 before Parliament later this month. The regulations will lift the current general prohibition on the sale of irradiated foods in Great Britain and introduce a licensing system for food treatment facilities.

Fish Farms

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the studies which have associated the growth of each blue/green algae with nutrient-rich waters resulting from fish farm wastes.

Mr. Curry: This Department is aware of no studies which link the growth of blue-green algae with nutrient-rich waters resulting specifically from fish farm wastes.

Foxes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received the copy of the research undertaken at the university of Aberdeen into lamb predation by foxes which has been sent to him; and if he intends to respond to this report.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend is considering the report with a view to deciding how he might respond to it.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Nursery Education

Hilary Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the average cost of a place in (a) a nursery school, (b) a nursery class and (c) a reception class for four-year-olds.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not collected centrally. Local authority expenditure returns to the Department of the Environment do not identify separate figures for the education of under-fives. A single set of figures is returned covering all nursery and primary provision.

Supercomputing

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that there will be no reduction in the number of supercomputing centres now available for British academic research, when responsibilities for these facilities are transferred to the Advisory Body for the Research Councils in April 1991.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Our general policy is at least to maintain the current overall level of national supercomputing services. The number of centres to provide these services will, in the normal way, remain a matter for review from time to time.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether the Government are planning to expand supercomputing facilities available to British academic research to the levels available to researchers in France and Italy;

(2) what plans he has for supercomputing expansion programmes similar to those being pursued in (a) West Germany, (b) the United States of America and (c) Japan, respectively.

Mr. Alan Howarth: From 1 April 1991, responsibility for national supercomputing facilities for research council and HEI research will transfer to the research council system. My right hon. and learned Friend is awaiting the advice of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on the allocation of the science budget, which was announced on 8 November.

Teachers

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what machinery is to be put in place to ensure that differentials are maintained between head teachers and deputies and other teaching staff.

Mr. Eggar: The School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Bill, which is currently before the House, envisages the establishment of a separate sub-committee to consider the pay and other conditions of service of head teachers and deputy head teachers.

Battersea Park CTC

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much (a) Government money, (b) money from sponsors and (c) capital from Wandsworth council will be put into the Battersea Park voluntary-aided city technology college.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend is aware of the very interesting proposal from Wandsworth for a voluntary-aided school with the characteristics of a city technology college. If confirmed by the council, this would come to him for decision under sections 12 and 13 of the 1980 Education Act, and would be considered on its merits. He would also need to consider any application for Government funding which might come from the LEA and the promoters of the proposal.

ADT City Technology College

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what direction he gave the London residuary body as to disposal of the site for the ADT city technology college in Wandsworth; what was the valuation of the site; and what provision has been made to compensate inner London boroughs for the loss of their proportion of the capital value of the site that has been transferred to the ADT city technology college.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has given no direction to the LRB as to the disposal of this site. The LRB valued the site for educational purposes, and on that basis leased it to ADT. The valuation is confidential commercial information. The receipts from the lease will be used for the benefit of all the inner London councils.

Wandsworth Boys School

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what direction he proposes to give the London residuary body as to release of the site of the former Wandsworth boys' school in Sutherland grove, Wandsworth; and what provision will be made to compensate inner London boroughs for the loss of their proportion of the capital value of the site.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has directed the LRB to hold Sutherland grove pending proposals to establish a new Church of England school under section 13 of the Education Act 1980. These proposals would require the approval of my right hon. and learned Friend. If the proposals were approved the site would be sold at educational value by the LRB to the governors of the school. If the proposals were not approved, or if proposals were not brought forward, the site would be sold by the LRB at full commercial value. In either case, the receipts would be used to benefit all the inner London councils.

Pensions Branch, Darlington

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy that any arrangements considered regarding agency status for the pensions branch in Darlington will preclude moving the facility from Darlington.

Mr. Alan Howarth: In keeping with Government policy on relocation, and our policy that the Departments' main offices should be located only in London or Darlington, it is our expectation that, if a pensions agency were to be established, it would remain in Darlington. Location is one of a range of matters that would fall to be addressed in the development of any framework document for an agency.

Higher Education

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what number and percentage of the total of students in higher education attended private schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department's survey of leavers from English schools in academic year 1988-89 indicates that approximately one quarter of pupils whose intended destination on leaving school was full-time higher education were attending independent schools.

Evidence from the youth cohort study also indicated that some 25 per cent. of 18-year-olds in higher education had attended independent schools.

Information published by UCCA shows that there were nearly 16 thousand students accepted for entry at United Kingdom universities in autumn 1989 from independent schools in England and Wales.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average cost of a place in higher education.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Available recurrent public funding per full-time equivalent home student in the Universities Funding Council and Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council sectors is planned at £5,320 for the 1991-92 financial year.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Technology Group

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give outline approval to the exhibition in the Upper Waiting Corridor on the work and achievements of the British technology group as requested in a letter to the hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) from the hon. Member for South Hams.

Mr. Leigh: My noble Friend the Minister for Industry has written to the hon. Member for South Hams (Mr. Steen) indicating his agreement to balloting for this purpose.

Economic League

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will prosecute the Economic League for failing to file an up-to-date set of annual reports and accounts as required by sections 242 and 244 of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Redwood: Economic League Ltd. is currently filed up-to-date. The last accounts filed cover the period ended 31 December 1989. Accounts for the period ending 31 December 1990 will become due on 1 November 1991.

Rigidized Metals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will prosecute the directors of Rigidized Metals for failure to file up-to-date accounts as required by sections 242 and 244 of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Redwood: Rigidized Metals Ltd. has failed to submit accounts for the period ended 31 August 1989. The registrar has confirmed that the company has been notified of the default and appropriate action is being taken to secure compliance.

Foreign Currency

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has for consultation with the Institute of Chartered Accountants about SSAP 20 on foreign currency transactions.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 November 1990]: None. The requirements of SSAP 20 are a matter for the Accounting Standards Board.

Polly Peck

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from Mr. Gottfried Hofmann or the English Institute of Chartered Accountants on the operation of SSAP 20 and its effects on Polly Peck's reporting of overseas transactions.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 November 1990]: None, so far as I am aware.

Company Accounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what check is made on the accounts and positions of companies which lodge their accounts late at Companies house.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 November 1990]: Companies house carries out certain basic checks on all accounts lodged with it, but the contents are not scrutinised in detail except in response to specific complaints. Companies house takes various steps to pursue companies which have failed to submit accounts on time.

Fiveoaks Investments

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to investigate the latest published accounts of Fiveoaks Investments for failure to comply with SSAP 6.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 November 1990]: No. Compliance with accounting standards is a matter for the accountancy profession pending the establishment of the review panel under the aegis of the Financial Reporting Council.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Republic of Ireland

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the views expressed concerning Northern Ireland's relationship with the Republic of Ireland by Mr. Serrard Cowper-Coles, the first secretary at the British embassy in Washington, at the Boston Investor Responsibility Research Centre, represents Government policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the right hon. Member for Lagan Valley (Mr. Molyneaux) on 29 November 1990 at column 456.

El Salvador

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what continuing interest is maintained by Her Majesty's Government into the investigation by the authorities in El Salvador into the murder of Jesuit priests; whether he anticipates any further direct assistance by representatives of Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have repeatedly made clear to the Salvadorean Government the need to bring the investigation to a successful conclusion and the murderers to justice. We hope that New Scotland Yard's report, which has now been handed over, will help them to do so. We and our EC partners re-emphasised our concern in a joint statement on the anniversary of the murders on 16 November.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Salvadorean authorities have given any commitment to make available the results of the investigation of the murder of Jesuit priests; and when he expects that the inquiry will report.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The investigation is being conducted by a judge according to the Salvadorean legal process. It is not yet clear when the case will come to trial.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community's Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Health Council will meet on 3 December to discuss the Commission's proposals for partial harmonisation of rules governing the advertising of tobacco, the European Year of Nutrition in 1994 and for Community action against drug abuse in sport. Ministers will also discuss a request for greater involvement in proposals connected with food safety. Further action in the areas of drug abuse and AIDS will be considered and the Council may also discuss proposals for improving the prevention and treatment of acute human poisoning. Statements are expected to be made by the Commission on the institution of a committee on health protection, co-operation between the EC and the WHO and progress on biomedical research. The Presidency will put forward communications on action in the field of pharmaceuticals in the Internal Market Council and the proposals for the elderly which were discussed in the Social Affairs Council on 26 November. Proposals for an exchange of information on cardiovascular disease are expected to be taken as an "A" point.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 3 December to discuss the directive on money laundering; further work on economic and monetary union in preparation for the forthcoming inter-governmental conference; and the proposed revisions of the financial perspective as a result of German unification and the Gulf crisis. Ministers will also consider the Commission's proposal for a transitional VAT system after 1992, and in particular the VAT control compromise proposal. Tax harmonisation in the road transport sector will also be considered, and there will be a discussion, with a view to reaching agreement, on provisions relating to off-market trading and the access of banks to exchanges.

The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 4 December to look at the preparations for the intergovernmental conferences (IGCs) on economic and monetary union and on political union and will take the procedural decision to convene the IGCs. Ministers will also discuss preparations for the European Council, which will include a discussion of assistance to the Soviet Union and possibly of EC aid to eastern Europe. The Council will review progress in the negotiations with EFTA countries on the European economic area, and will consider further the implications of German unification. There will be discussions of a Commission statement on the occupied territories, of the generalised scheme of preferences (GSP) for 1991 and of the media programme. Ministers are also likely to discuss reports on immigration policy in member states and the social integration of immigrants. Under other business there is likely to be a discussion of ACP debt, and there will be the nomination of President and Vice-Presidents of the Commission at a conference of member states.

At the Education Council on 6 December, Ministers are likely to discuss the Eurydice network, the role of education in the fight against drugs and Community co-operation in the evaluation of education systems. The Council may also consider the governing status of European schools, and the non-university sector of post-secondary schools.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 10 and 11 December and will discuss the agricultural aspects of the GATT round, GATT beef import quotas and the review of the sugar regime. Other items which may be discussed are the common organisation of the market in oils and fats, table olives, aromatic wines, revisions to regulation 797/85 concerning agriculture and the environment, costs of CAP information across the Community, the report on inter-professional organisations and the welfare of pigs and calves.

At the Consumer and Internal Market Council on 13 December Ministers will consider a number of measures relevant to the completion of the single market, and a proposal for a regulation to prevent the diversion of precursor chemicals used in the illicit manufacture of drugs. Ministers will also discuss a proposal for a general product safety directive on which the Presidency hopes to achieve further progress on the key outstanding issues, although there are still a number of differences to be resolved. There is also likely to be an oral presentation by the Commission on the proposal for a directive on the liability for services with a safety defect.

At a meeting of the Telecommunications Council on 14 December, Ministers will consider a proposal for a Council resolution on the final phase of implementation of the co-ordinated introduction of the pan-European digital cellular communications system (GSM). There will be an orientation debate on the role of telecommunications in EC relations with the countries of eastern and central Europe, which may result in Council conclusions. The Commission will present a proposal for a Council decision on a second phase of the EC programme TEDIS and a communication on EDI. As this agenda item is to be no more than a presentation there will be no Council conclusions. The Council will also have the first opportunity to debate the final version of the Commission's Green Paper on a common approach in the field of satellite communications in the European Community which was adopted by the Commission on 14 November. There will be an orientation debate which may result in Council conclusions. The Council may also be expected to agree a recommendation on the co-ordinated introduction of digital European cordless telecommunications in the Community and to agree a common position on a directive on the frequency bands to be reserved for them.

The European Council will meet in Rome on 14 and 15 December. Heads of Government are likely to discuss the forthcoming intergovernmental conference on political union, the current crisis in the Gulf and assistance to the Soviet Union. There is also likely to be a discussion of the single market and perhaps of the siting of the instituions. Heads of Government may consider economic and monetary union, GATT, EC/EFTA negotiations and EC/Mediterranean policy.

The Economic and Finance Council on 17 December is expected to discuss the Commission's proposals for extending European Investment Bank operations to Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and Romania, with a Community guarantee, and may also discuss the disbursement of the medium-term loan to Hungary. Ministers will discuss the Commission's proposal for a transitional VAT system, and may also consider the Commission's proposal for the control of the movements of excise goods post-1992, which was presented at the October Economic and Finance Council.

The Transport Council will meet on 17 to 18 December and is expected to discuss proposals on the dimensions of road trains, combined transport, shipping cabotage, various aspects of the aviation industry, and road haulage quotas and crisis measures. There will be orientation debates on shipping consortia and the transfer of vessels between Community registers, and some discussion of transit through third countries. Infrastructure cost coverage, high-speed rail networks and the impact of German unification may also feature on the agenda.

There will be a special meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council on 18 December to discuss follow-up to the European Council. Ministers will also discuss the Community position for the co-operation council with Egypt which will take place in the margins, and will discuss draft negotiating mandates for association agreements with Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia. The Council will have a further discussion of the Commission's proposals for a new Mediterranean policy, and will discuss the Commission's proposals for a new (third) EC/Yugoslavia financial protocol, and will also consider the Commission's proposals for strengthening EC/Turkey relations. Ministers will also discuss the aid programme for Asia and Latin America, and may consider EC relations with San Marino and the GATT Uruguay round.

The Fisheries Council will meet on 19 December to discuss total allowable catches for 1991 including arrangements with third countries, tariff quotas for 1991, the amendment of the structural regulation and technical conservation measures.

The Environment Council scheduled for 20 and 21 December will consider proposals for directives on the treatment of municipal waste water (sewage discharges), on the management of hazardous waste, on motor vehicle emissions and on the classification, packaging and labelling of dangerous substances. Proposed Council regulations on an action programme to protect the Mediterranean (MEDSPA) and on substances that deplete the ozone layer will also be considered. It is possible that the Council will hold further discussions on the use of economic and fiscal instruments to attain environmental objectives.

The Research Council will meet on 21 December and will discuss the Presidency's suggestion of informal meetings of Research Ministers. It is possible that common positions will be agreed on the environment, marine technology and telematics programmes under the third framework programme. The Council will consider the EC's role in the next phase of the international thermonuclear experimental reactor (ITER) programme.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what subjects, including security, are under discussion by the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental conference secretariat at Maryfield.

Mr. Brooke: It has not been the practice to make public details of discussions in the Anglo-Irish secretariat, in common with the confidentiality usual in discussions between Governments.

Rural Development

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will give details of the funding arrangements for the interdepartmental committee for rural development;

(2) if he has plans to establish a permanent body responsible for rural development in Northern Ireland;

(3) if he will give details of the composition of the interdepartmental committee for rural development established in Northern Ireland in 1989;

(4) if he will give details of the terms of reference of the interdepartmental committee for rural development established in Northern Ireland in 1989;

(5) if he will give details of the work (a) carried out to date and (b) to be carried out by the interdepartmental committee for rural development established in Northern Ireland in 1989.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 30 November 1990]: The interdepartmental committee on rural development is chaired by the permanent secretary of the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland. Its members are drawn from the six Northern Ireland Government Departments and from other statutory agencies with an interest in rural matters including the Industrial Development Board, the Local Enterprise Development Unit, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board.

The Committee's terms of reference are :

- to continue the work started by the earlier interdepartmental group, maintaining an overview of Government policies and programmes in the most deprived rural areas of Northern Ireland in order to maximise the impact of existing expenditure;
- to consider appropriate area sensitivity and improved co-ordination at local level in the application of mainline Departmental programmes;
- to consider and develop appropriate responses to the conclusions put forward by the rural action project and other relevant reports; and
- to monitor and evaluate measures initiated.

In pursuit of its remit, the committee has held discussions with district councils, the rural action project, promoters of rural development projects and other rural interests. An early decision, following a recommendation from the Committee, was to fund the rural action project for a further year to 31 March 1991. Some £0·25 million has been allocated to the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland in the current financial year to meet these costs and to provide assistance to voluntary bodies engaged in activities designed to identify the needs of, and means of assisting, deprived rural areas. The costs of secretarial support to the Committee and other associated overheads have been borne by the Department from existing resources.

The Committee has now completed its work and expects to report in the very near future. It is not possible at this stage to anticipate either the report's recommendations or the decisions which will follow. Although it is not intended to publish the report, decisions flowing from it will be announced as appropriate.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake an immediate and fundamental review of the poll tax.

Mr. Portillo: We shall shortly start a careful review of the community charge.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding delays in the processing of community charge and benefit payments within the North Devon district council area; and if he will offer assistance with clearing the backlog.

Mr. Key: I have received a number of representations. It is the responsibility of each charging authority to ensure the effective administration of the community charge. However, in order to assist charging authorities in the introduction of the community charge, the Government made provision of £110 million for expenditure on implementation in the rate support grant settlement for 1989-90. £55 million of this was supported by way of specific grant; the rest formed part of block grant. For 1990-91 we have taken account of the cost to charging authorities of collecting the community charge in the other services block standard spending assessment, and the cost is therefore being supported through the revenue support grant settlement.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much national non-domestic rate has been collected; and how much has been (a) distributed to local councils and (b) retained within the Treasury.

Mr. Key: The amount of national non-domestic rates due to be paid into the central pool for England in 1990-91 by local authorities, by ratepayers on the central list and through Crown contributions in lieu of rates is £10,743·5 million. This is £315 million more than the amount paid to authorities in 1990-91 in the distributable amount of national non-domestic rates (£10,428·5 million).

The arrangements for setting the distributable amount ensure that, taking one year with another, local authorities receive in full the amount which is paid into the pool. The proposed distributable amount for 1991-92 of £12,408 million takes full account of the £385 million by which the yield of non-domestic rates during 1990-91 is likely to exceed the distributable amount for 1990-91. This comprises the £315 million surplus paid into the pool during 1990-91 and an estimated £70 million which is the net payment that local authorities are expected to make to the pool in autumn 1991 after adjustments to reflect the amount of rates actually collectable from businesses in 1990-91.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much Government grant to local authorities would have to rise to prevent any wage bill-related rise in the 1991 poll tax bills, using his Department's assumption of rising wage costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: My Department has made no particular assumption about rising pay costs in 1991. However, the amount of external financial support to be distributed to local authorities in 1991-92 will be 12·8 per cent. higher than in 1990-91.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will now announce the terms and timescale of his review of the poll tax;

(2) whether he will immediately exempt those on the lowest incomes from the liability for 20 per cent. of the poll tax; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will now abolish the poll tax;

(4) whether his review of the poll tax will include measures to relate the tax to the ability to pay; and if he will make a statement;

(5) whether his review of the poll tax will include measures to relate the tax directly to income; and if he will make a statement;

(6) whether he now intends to end the double charge of poll tax and the unified business rate on those small businesses where the owner lives on the premises; and if he will make a statement;

(7) whether his review of the poll tax will be cash limited; and if he will make a statement;

(8) whether his review of the poll tax will encompass any transfer of services currently funded and controlled at local authority level to central Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend is just starting a careful review of the community charge. It is premature to speculate on what possibilities he might look at in detail, or when any changes might take effect.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities who have commenced court proceedings to seek liability orders against those who have not paid the poll tax at the latest available date; and what proportion this is of the total number of authorities.

Mr. Key: The Department does not have this information.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now seek to repeal that section of the poll tax legislation covering the capping of local authority budgets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: No.

Formaldehyde

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment from what date he means to fix the emission level for formaldehyde production at 2mg/m^3; and what staff resources will be devoted to policing this limit.

Mr. Trippier: Guidance will be issued to local authorities early next year, under part I of the Environmental Protection Act, on appropriate standards of air pollution control from chipboard manufacturing plant. Responses to the recent consultation on the final draft of that guidance, which proposed an emission limit of 2mg/m^3 for formaldehyde, are currently being considered.

Responsibility for exercising control over chipboard processes will rest with local authorities, who will be able to recover the reasonable costs of exercising their new air pollution control functions under a charging scheme being drawn up under section 8 of the Act.

Historic Buildings

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the buildings on which he has served a section 54 notice concerning the preservation of historic buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Under section 54 of the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990, previously section 101 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, a local planning authority may, after service of a notice, execute any works which appear to them to be urgently necessary for the preservation of unoccupied (or unoccupied parts) of a listed building; and section 55 provides for recovery of expenses. In Greater London, these powers are also available to English Heritage.

In addition, the Secretary of State has the power to serve a notice under section 54. Since 1 April 1984 this power has had to be exercised through English Heritage, who serve the notice when authorised to do so by the Secretary of State and carry out the works on his behalf.

The Secretary of State served a notice under section 101 of the 1971 Act in 1981 in respect of the grade I listed Barlaston hall, Staffordshire, and in 1987 he authorised English Heritage to serve a section 101 notice in respect of the grade I listed Revesby abbey, Lincolnshire.

Successive Secretaries of State have made it clear that they would serve or authorise the service of a section 54 notice only where the building concerned is of exceptional interest.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the total Government expenditure on the upkeep, care and protection of historic buildings and monuments in England in each year since 1980.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 29 November 1990]: Government funding for the upkeep, care and protection of historic buildings and monuments in England (and for the protection and promotion of the heritage generally) is channelled through a number of non-departmental public bodies, agencies and departmental programmes. The main ones are English Heritage (established in 1984), the National Heritage Memorial Fund (established in 1980), the Royal Commission on the Historical Monuments of England, the Historic Royal Palaces Agency (established in 1989), and the royal parks and royal palaces programme.

The total allocation of resources to the full range of agencies and programmes supported by the Department has risen from about £55 million net in 1980-81 to a planned budget of £173·6 million in 1991-92. Not all these resources are spent on historic buildings and monuments, and there have been a number of changes in policy, organisation and responsibilities since 1980 which preclude direct comparisons between Government expenditure on buildings and monuments over the last 10 years. However, the main source of support for this category of the heritage are the repair grant schemes run directly by the Department prior to 1984 and by English Heritage thereafter. Expenditure on these schemes was £12 million in 1979, against English Heritage's planned budget of £35 million in 1991-92 which includes provision for the new grant scheme to assist repairs to historic cathedrals. Additionally, English Heritage owns or manages on behalf of the state over 400 properties and sites, on which about £25 million net expenditure is planned in 1991-92. The Historic Royal Palaces Agency's planned net expenditure in 1991-92 is £9·3 million and planned net expenditure on the occupied royal palaces, other historic buildings and state ceremonial in that year is £30·8 million.

Highcliffe Castle

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his discussions with English Heritage concerning the future of Highcliffe castle, Dorset.

Mr. Trippier: English Heritage has been in discussion with Christchurch borough council (which is the owner of the grade I listed Highcliffe castle as well as being the local planning authority) with the aim of securing the repair of the building and a beneficial use for it in the future. The Department has been kept in touch with the progress of these discussions.

I understand that English Heritage has offered grant aid of up to £200,000 to the council towards the cost of urgent repairs to the building. The authority has accepted this offer and work is expected to begin shortly.

English Heritage has made it clear to the council that if repairs are not carried out it will ask the Secretary of State to use his powers under section 54 of the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990 to authorise English Heritage itself to carry out the works. I cannot of course prejudge my right hon. Friend's decision if he should be asked to take this step, but he would consider the case very carefully in the light of the circumstances.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received from the Housing Corporation identifying (a) the areas of the country where its overspend occurred and (b) which of the additional units completed are located in the 57 stress areas.

Sir George Young: This is a matter for the Housing Corporation. I have therefore asked the corporation to respond to the hon. Member direct.

Statisticians

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many statisticians are employed in his Department; and how many are responsible for local authority statistics.

Mr. Key: Forty-two statisticians of all grades are employed in my Department, including one part-time and three whose appointments are on a temporary basis. Of these, 25 have some responsibilities for local authority statistics, amounting in total to the equivalent of 18 full-time posts.

Local Authorities (Investigation)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities his Department is investigating under part I of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Portillo: As I indicated in my answer of 21 November 1990, at column 144, my Department is currently investigating complaints of alleged anti-competitive behaviour under part I of the Local Government Act 1988 in the case of 48 local authorities. It is not my policy to publish the names of authorities while actions are under investigation. Authorities are named in cases where the Secretary of State makes a direction under section 14 of the 1988 Act.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will revise his Department's standard spending assessments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend is at present considering the many representations which have been received from local authority representatives about their standard spending assessments during the period of consultation on the proposals for revenue support grant in 1991-92. He will announce his decisions on the 1991-92 settlement shortly.

School Caretakers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he plans to include school caretakers in the scope of compulsory competitive tendering under the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Portillo: Building cleaning work undertaken by a school caretaker is already subject to compulsory competitive tendering unless it is only incidental to the major part of his duties or he lives in tied accommodation. There are no plans to introduce competition for other work undertaken by school caretakers.

Land Registration

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 39, if he will state the definition of the term "underused land", as distinct from used or unused land.

Sir George Young: The code of practice, which was referred to in the previous answer and which is annexed to DOE circular 18/89, includes a definition of "underused land." However, the criteria for entry on the statutory registers proposed in the recent consultation paper "Encouraging the use of vacant public sector land", including the criterion relating to underused land, would be the subject of separate consultations in due course.

East Newcastle Quayside

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is willing to consider alternative proposals to the Godfrey Bradman scheme for the redevelopment of east Newcastle quayside that are acceptable to the principal objectors to the Bradman scheme.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 30 November 1990]: The Tyne and Wear development corporation considered a number of proposals before developing its preferred option. It is for the development corporation to consider any new proposals which might be put to it.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who are the principal shareholders in the company chosen by the Tyne and Wear urban development corporation to develop the east quayside site in Newcastle; and how much public money is to be invested in the project.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 30 November 1990]: The selection of a preferred developer, and matters relating to that development, are the responsibility of the Tyne and Wear development corporation. No decision has yet been taken by Government on the total amount of public money which might be provided for the east quayside project.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest timetable for the development of the east Newcastle quayside; when the project was first announced; and how much building work has been carried out to date.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 30 November 1990]: The timetable for development is a matter for Tyne and Wear development corporation and the developer jointly to determine. The announcement of the selection of a preferred scheme was made in September 1988. The following works have been carried out on the site to date: demolition of dangerous buildings and walls, removal of Ballast Hill and retaining wall, excavation of old foundations and cleaning out of underground pitch tunnel, clearance of pigeon loft site, and archaeological excavation works.

Spencer House

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any official bookings have been made by Government Departments in respect of Spencer house.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 November 1990]: My Department has made no such bookings. Any bookings which may have been made by other Departments are a matter for my right hon. Friends.

TRANSPORT

Environmental Impact Assessments

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all road schemes which have had their line orders confirmed since 21 July 1988, and for which no environmental impact assessment study has been conducted.

Mr. Chope: All schemes in the national trunk road programme have for many years been subject to a very full environmental appraisal before the line orders are confirmed. Within the requirements of the EC directive, a formal environmental statement has accompanied all draft orders published since 21 July 1988. Those for which line orders were confirmed since that date but which did not fall within the requirements of the directive are as follows:

M3 Bar End—Compton
A1 Bramham—Wetherby
A1 Wetherby—Dishforth
A1 Gatenby lane, Leeming
A1 Tempsford overbridge scheme
A3 Liphook—Ham Barn part 2

Parking Restrictions

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to prohibit (a) the levying of charges and (b) the clamping of cars by private companies employed to enforce parking restrictions.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Warwick and Leamington (Sir D. Smith) on 22 November 1990 at column 169.

British Rail (Surplus Land)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review his Department's instructions to British Rail relating to the disposal of surplus land as part of the annual negotiations on the external financing limit specifically to separate the rules applying to actual trackbed as opposed to other land holdings; and when these instructions were last reviewed.

Mr. Freeman: The policies that the Government look for in the handling of British Rail land were last restated to BR in September 1985. They require, among other things, that the board should make a commercial plan for identifying and divesting itself of all its underused or surplus property. There are no plans to review these instructions, which are not linked to the annual negotiations on the external financing limit. Before deciding whether to declare disused trackbeds non-operational and subject to disposal, BR takes account of possible future operational needs and consults widely local authorities and other appropriate organisations.

Rail Electrification, Yorkshire

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce a decision concerning loan approval for the electrification of rail services in West Yorkshire, including the Bradford-Leeds railway.

Mr. Freeman: As I informed the House on 26 November, the Government are reserving the appropriate resources to enable the electrification of this railway line.

A127

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the target date for the completion of the works at Rayleigh Weir on the A127; what is the likely completion date; and what steps he proposes to take to ensure that the works are completed on schedule.

Mr. Chope: I refer to the reply that I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Sir B. Braine) about Rayleigh Weir underpass 30 November 1990 at column 492.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the debt on the Severn bridge in 1989;

(2) how much the accumulated debt on the Severn bridge is at the latest available date.

Mr. Chope: The debt to the Consolidated Fund at 31 March 1989 was £113,376,084. For 31 March 1990 it is estimated to be £133 million.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the estimated completion date for the current renovation and maintenance work on the Severn bridge;

(2) what items of repair and renovation have been completed on the Severn bridge in the last 12 months;

(3) what work is currently under way on the Severn bridge;

(4) what is the current projected cost of the repair and maintenance work on the Severn bridge;

(5) what is the nature of work still to be done on the Severn bridge;

(6) what is the estimated final cost of repair work likely to be on the Severn bridge.

Mr. Chope: The contract for the main strengthening work was substantially completed in April. The resurfacing contract (which includes wind barriers at the towers and safety fence work) is due for completion late next summer. Certain other minor works, including painting, are also still in progress.

The estimated cost of the repair and strengthening work is £80 million.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much was collected in 1989 in tolls on the Severn bridge.

Mr. Chope: Income from tolls in the financial year 1989-90 was £13,609,424.

Manchester to London Rail Service

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the number of train journeys which are significantly delayed due to mechanical problems on the Manchester to London service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department does not hold this information. This is a commercial matter for British Rail.

Humber Bridge Authority

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about his discussions with the Humber Bridge Authority concerning the settlement of its debt.

Mr. Chope: The Humber Bridge Board has presented a case for the write-off of some of its debt. This is being given careful consideration.

Mersey Tunnel

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current debt on the Mersey tunnel.

Mr. Chope: The debt at 31 March 1990 was £116 million.

M1

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make arrangements for the provision of tourist signs on the M1 motorway indicating directions to the Yorkshire mining museum at Gaphouse colliery, Overton, near Wakefield.

Mr. Chope: Tourist signs on motorways can be provided for attractions which meet criteria agreed between the Department of Transport and the tourist boards. The cost of such signs is met by the operator of the tourist attraction.

M25

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish new plans for improving the M25.

Mr. Rifkind: I have today published an action plan for the M25 which carries forward a number of proposals for easing congestion on the M25 by enhancing its capacity and smoothing traffic flows.

My Department is pressing ahead with the plans announced in the May 1989 Roads White Paper for widening the whole of the M25 to four lanes. The consultants will also investigate longer-term options such as climbing lanes, widening to five lanes and the provision of collector-distributor roads alongside the motorway. My Department will continue to examine the options for making full use of the existing carriageway.

The plan contains a number of important traffic management measures to assist drivers and improve safety and traffic flows. These include lighting the motorway, improved signalling through the use of automatic incident detection in conjunction with new variable message signs, and improved arrangements for smoothing the flow of traffic at junctions—including the use of access control where appropriate.

I am sure this plan will be welcomed by many users of the M25 and by communities that have been relieved of traffic by the M25.

Motorway Maintenance Contracts

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how his Department ensures cost-effectiveness in motorway surface maintenance contracts where he does not open up contracts to competitive bidding by public and private sector organisations.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 29 November 1990]: We keep under review the general orders of cost of agent authorities and consultants in managing maintenance. In those areas where we use consultants we are satisfied that the arrangement gives value for money. Competition between consultants for commissions is the main discipline for ensuring this.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list by each motorway section in England and Wales the names of companies and organisations holding contracts for surface maintenance, giving details of when they were made, when they are due to expire, the value of each contract and indicating those whose renewal will be decided by competitive tender.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 29 November 1990]: The following are details of current commissions for managing motorway maintenance. All will expire on 31 March next year, and competitions are in progress for new commissions. Elsewhere maintenance of motorways is currently managed by local highway authorities acting as our agents.

Details of commissions

Commission and consultant	Start date	Approximate value £ million/year
Greater Manchester
Parkman	1 April 1986	25
South Yorkshire
Sir Owen Williams and Partners	1 April 1986	10
West Yorkshire
Frank Graham and Partners	1 April 1986	29
Midland Links
Atkins/Maunsell joint venture	1 April 1987	13

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what grounds he refused to allow Birmingham city council to bid for the contract as agent for his Department in the maintenance of the midlands link motorway.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make it his policy to allow Birmingham city council and any interested and qualified private sector consultants competitively to bid for the contract for surface maintenance of the midlands link motorway from junction 5 to near junction 9 on the M6 and to near junction 2 on the M5 when the present contract comes up for renewal.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 29 November 1990]: There is no legal basis on which a local authority can compete with consultants for motorway maintenance commissions. Consultants have already been managing these sections of motorway. In view of the success of this arrangement we are currently holding a further competition to appoint consultants when the present commission expires next year. This approach accords with Government policy of contracting work out to the private sector wherever this is consistent with sound management and obtaining value for money.

HEALTH

Military Medical Requirements

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instructions have been given to national health service burns and plastic surgery units as a result of possible conflict in the Gulf, with particular regard to the treatment of victims suffering from chemical, biological and nuclear-related injuries.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Guidance for clinicians on the handling of various categories of military casualty, should the need arise, is in preparation.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions have been made for United States military casualties by United Kingdom civilian health facilities in the event of war.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the joint Department of Health and Ministry of Defence planning group guidance to regional health authorities on the reception and allocation arrangements for armed forces to the national health service in war.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to whom guidelines have been issued relating to the reception of casualties resulting from conflict in the Gulf.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Guidance for regional health authorities is in preparation and will be issued soon.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any national health service personnel have been deployed to the Gulf in anticipation of military conflict in that region.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Laundry Services, Hereford

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial investment has been made in laundry services and facilities by Hereford health authority in each of the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. E. Bulmer, the chairman of the Herefordshire health authority, for the information he requires.

Organ Transplants

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration is being given to financially assisting intensive therapy units involved in removing organs for transplantation; in how many cases lack of sufficient funds has prevented organs from being requested from next of kin; and what is the cost on average of such operations.

Mr. Dorrell: We are actively considering the possibility of identifying and reimbursing hospitals for costs incurred in organ donation. Information on the reasons why organs are not requested from the next of kin is not collected centrally.

Hospital Complaints Procedure

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he is satisfied that adequate publicity is being given on hospital wards to the existence of the Hospital Complaints Procedure Act 1985; and what instructions have been issued to health authorities to ensure that this happens.

Mr. Dorrell: Directions were issued to health authorities in June 1988 to "take such steps as are necessary to ensure that any patients at, or visitors to, any hospital for which the authority is responsible, . . . are fully informed of the arrangements for dealing with complaints made at the hospital and are informed of the identity and location of the designated officer for such hospital."

All regional health authorities have confirmed that the directions are being complied with.

Residential Homes

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 19 November 1990, Official Report, column 51, if he will make it his policy to seek an opportunity in the current Session of Parliament to introduce legislation on small residential homes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We intend to take an early opportunity to introduce such legislation.

Kidney Patients

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the total funding currently committed to the care of renal patients either as a result of dialysis or transplantation; and what was the figure for 1978-79.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what directions have been issued to general practitioners about prescribing recently licensed drugs for renal patients when its use would otherwise be limited by pressure on hospital budgets.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Responsibility for prescribing, and hence who pays for the treatment, rests with the doctor who has clinical responsibility for the patient. Clinical responsibility can be on a shared care basis if appropriate but this is a matter to be agreed by the professionals involved. GPs, who feel that prescribing a particular drug is beyond their professional competence and not in the best interests of patient care, can quite properly refuse to prescribe.

Wheelchairs

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to introduce self-propelled wheelchairs into hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: Decisions on the provision of equipment in hospitals are a matter for individual health authorities. The Department has no plans to require authorities to introduce self-propelled wheelchairs for the use of in-patients.

Community Health Councils

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy towards community health councils following the reform of the national health service; whether their membership is to be strengthened in line with changes to health authorities; and what consideration has been given to making community health council chairmen co-opted members of the health authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Government policy remains that there will be no change in the fundamental role of community health councils. Amendment regulations have been made to adapt the formal framework within which community health councils operate so as to reflect the new methods of working within the national health service. There are no plans to revise the membership of community health councils, nor to co-opt their chairmen on to health authorities.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EC Phone Calls

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects that hon. Members will be able to telephone agreed numbers in the European Community via the House of Commons telephone service without charge.

Mr. MacGregor: The Services Committee is expected to consider at its next meeting a proposal to establish direct telecommunications links with a number of European Community exchanges. If the proposal is accepted, the necessary work to establish the connections could be completed a short time thereafter.

Electronic Voting

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will initiate a study of the possibility of introducing a system of electronic voting in the House.

Mr. MacGregor: Any proposal to initiate such a study should be made in the first instance to the Procedure Committee.

WALES

Pembrokeshire Health Authority

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the application by Pembrokeshire health authority for national health service trust status.

Mr. David Hunt: Pembrokeshire health authority has not yet lodged an application for NHS trust status. The authority has submitted an "Expression of Interest" which outlines its proposal for a trust. I am currently considering this submission and whether to invite an application.

Local Authority Housing

16. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the most recent figure for empty local authority housing for up to (a) six months, (b) 12 months and (c) over one year; if he will list the local authorities concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The total number of empty dwellings on 1 April 1990 was 3,492 representing 1·55 per cent. of the local authority stock. The number of properties vacant for more than six months was 327. Figures for all Welsh authorities are given in the table.

Information on dwellings vacant for 12 months or more is not available.

Japan and Korea (Visit)

21. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what matters were discussed on his recent visit to Japan and Korea.

Mr. David Hunt: I led an inward investment mission to Japan from 13 to 21 November accompanied by the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency.

During my visit I was delighted to be able to announce major new projects in Wales by Yuasa Battery and Gooding Sanken. I also had high-level discussions with other major Japanese companies and I am confident that further investment by Japanese companies will follow and enhance the excellent relationship between Wales and Japan.

I had meetings with senior representatives of the Japanese Government. I also addressed a seminar in Hiroshima organised by the Invest in Britain Bureau.

While in Tokyo I acted as host for a number of senior Japanese business people attending the final performance of the Welsh National Opera. I attended a meeting of the business leaders forum hosted by HRH the Prince of Wales.

I also visited the Oita prefecture of Japan where I discussed ways of developing the close links between Wales and Oita with Governor Hiramatsu.

I very much regret that parliamentary business obliged me to return before conducting my planned engagements in Korea.

National Parks

22. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total amount of funding proposed for national parks for 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The total approved expenditure for the three national parks in Wales for the financial year 1991-92 is £5,085,334 of which the Welsh Office will pay £3,814,000 (75 per cent.) by way of national parks supplementary grant and the balance will be met by the relevant county councils. This represents an 11·2 per cent. increase in provision on 1990-91. Since 1982-83 NPSG has increased in Wales in real terms by 37 per cent. a significant increase and evidence of the Government's support for the national parks.

Upper Garw Valley

23. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the starting date to be announced on the Upper Garw valley reclamation scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Development Agency gave formal approval to grant-aid the Upper Garw valley reclamation scheme on 31 March 1990. I understand that the agency is in discussion with Mid Glamorgan county council on the details of the contract and I hope a start date will be announced shortly.

Local Government Finance

24. Mr. Ieuann Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what correspondence he has received concerning the poll tax and young people on low incomes in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I have received correspondence on various aspects of the community charge, some of which has been about the position of young people.

Hospital Closures, South Glamorgan

25. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next plans to meet the chairman of South Glamorgan health authority to discuss hospital closures.

Mr. Grist: There are no plans to meet the chairman of South Glamorgan health authority to discuss hospital closures.

Passenger Rail Services

26. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss new passenger rail services.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend expects to meet Sir Robert Reid soon to discuss a range of rail issues.

Tourism

27. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will summarise the achievements of the section 4 grants given to the tourist industry in north Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The section 4 scheme administered by the Wales tourist board, which began operating in 1971, has greatly assisted the tourism industry throughout Wales. Since then, in Clwyd and Gwynedd nearly £17 million of grant and loan assistance has been provided supporting over 860 projects with a capital cost of some £92 million, creating or safeguarding around 3,750 jobs.

Pembrokeshire Health Authority

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the detailed timetable he intends to follow in dealing with the interest expressed by Pembrokeshire health authority in becoming a national health service trust.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend expects to reach a decision shortly on the expression of interest. In the longer term, any final conclusion on national health service trust status will be made following a three-month consultation period in the event that a formal application is submitted.

Legislative Powers

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on Government policy on the devolution of powers of legislation to Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government have no plans to devolve powers of legislation to Wales.

Departmental Office, Brussels

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans for establishing an office of his Department in Brussels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: No. The Welsh Office is already in close and sustained contact with the European Commission and with the office of the United Kingdom permanent representation in Brussels, which represents the interests of all Government Departments.

Statisticians

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many statisticians are employed in his Department; and how many are responsible for local authority statistics.

Mr. David Hunt: There are 25 statisticians currently employed in a professional capacity in the Welsh Office, of whom 15 are responsible in some degree for local authority statistics.

Sewage Sludge (Bristol Channel)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will request Welsh Water to dump its sewage sludge further west in the Bristol channel; and when he expects it to cease this method of disposal.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to do so, but as my hon. Friend will know, the Government decided earlier this year that all sewage sludge dumping at sea would cease at the latest by December 1998.

Tai Cymru

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the amount of public funding for Tai Cymru for 1990-91.

Mr. Grist: Excluding transfers from local authorities (for which final figures are not yet available), Tai Cymru has gross resources amounting to £102·183 million.

Social Workers

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of field social workers in Wales at the present time; and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Grist: The number of field social workers in Wales is as follows:

Social Workers	at 30 September
	1979	1989
Whole-time	748·0	1,033·0
Part-time
Number	70·0	135·0
wte[1]	36·1	67·2
Total wte	784·1	1,100·2

[1] Whole-time equivalent

Home Helps

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of home helps in Wales at the present time; and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Grist: The number of home helps in Wales is shown in the table:

Home helps	At 30 September 1979	1989
Whole-time	153·0	401·0
Part-time:
Number	6,234·0	7,877·0
wte[1]	2,671·8	3,576·8
Total wte	2,824·8	3,977·8

[1] Whole-time equivalents.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of residential places for mentally ill people in Wales at the present time; and what was the comparable figure in 1979.

Mr. Grist: The number of residential places for mentally ill people in Wales is shown in the table:

	As at 31 March 1979	1990
Accommodation provided by
Social services[1]	[2]329	349
Private registered homes	145	277
Voluntary registered homes	18	53
Other[3]	n.a.	100
Total	492	779

[1]Includes staffed and unstaffed accommodation provided by local authority social services departments.

[2]Excluding 129 mixed places which could accommodate either mentally ill or mentally handicapped people.

[3]Other providers include local authority housing authorities, housing associations, health authorities (excluding hospitals), unregistered private and voluntary homes (i.e. those catering for fewer than four people and which may be staffed or unstaffed).

Roads (Expenditure)

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest figure for capital expenditure on roads in Wales; and what was the comparable figure in 1979.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Net capital expenditure on new construction and improvement of motorways and trunk roads in Wales was £118 million in 1989-90 compared with £69 million in 1979-80. Provisional outturn for local authority capital expenditure on transport was £75 million in 1989-90 compared with £49 million in 1979-80.

Council House Sales

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of council houses sold in Wales since the introduction of the right to buy.

Mr. Grist: The number of local authority and new town dwellings sold in Wales under right to buy and voluntary terms since the introduction of right to buy in October 1980 is 85,552.

EMPLOYMENT

HSE (Complaints)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans the Health and Safety Executive has to change its policy on investigating anonymous complaints.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive has no current plans to change its policy on investigating anonymous complaints.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will indicate how far complaints to the Health and Safety Executive have increased over the last five years; and how much money the field operations division has received in each of the last five years.

Mr. Forth: Information about the number of complaints received by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) is available only for the last four years. A comparison of the number of complaints received in the period 1 April 1986 to 31 March 1987 and 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990 indicates an increase of over 80 per cent. HSE's field operations division was established only on 2 April 1990 with a budget of £50·5 million for 1990-91.

Accident Claims

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to allow the Health and Safety Executive to charge for providing factual statements about matters relating to accident claims.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive has charged for factual statements requested in connection with civil claims since November 1987. Charges are reviewed annually to ensure full recovery of the HSE's costs.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that training and enterprise councils encourage all young people leaving full-time education with vocationally relevant qualifications to participate in this training.

Mr. Jackson: I have set out in the recent publication "1990s: the Skills Decade" the strategic objectives which I expect TECs to address next year. A key objective is that young people should achieve their full potential and develop the skills that the economy needs.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that training and enterprise councils engage a variety of training providers to ensure flexibility in meeting the needs of individual trainees and individual employers.

Mr. Jackson: It is for each training and enterprise council to decide with which training providers to contract to meet the needs of their local community.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that training and enterprise councils construct a simple and stable scheme to devote resources to training and facilitate the development of that training.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) have been given the freedom and flexibility to adapt training schemes to meet the needs of their local area. I am confident that TECs will put these flexibilities to great use.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that training and enterprise councils make available, with appropriate funds, a choice of training for each individual of working age in Leicestershire up to the maximum of the individual's capability in economic terms.

Mr. Jackson: I am confident that the Leicestershire training and enterprise council will provide imaginative and comprehensive plans which will cater for the needs of its local community.

ET Tutors

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for what reasons employment training tutors are requested to fill in forms about trainees in their charge assessing their (a) dependency on drugs or alcohol, (b) verbal aggressiveness or anti-authority, (c) race, (d) debts, (e) family trap, (f) hygiene, (g) benefit problems and (h) single parenthood.

Mr. Jackson: It is not Government policy to require training and enterprise councils to ensure that this information is obtained from ET trainees. However, details of ethnic origin may be provided voluntarily by trainees on their trainee record form.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his policy towards discrimination on the grounds of age within the labour market.

Mr. Jackson: Our policy is to persuade employers to consider all applicants on merit, without imposing arbitrary age limits on recruitment.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to outlaw discrimination on the grounds of age within the workplace.

Mr. Jackson: We have no plans to introduce legislation on age discrimination, since we believe that it would be difficult to apply and uncertain in its effect.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available to his Department on legislation in other countries that outlaws age discrimination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that Canada and the United States of America have legislation on age discrimination in employment. I have not seen any evidence as to its effectiveness.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what (a) information and (b) research he has commissioned into discrimination on the grounds of age in the workplace.

Mr. Jackson: In 1989 my Department commissioned research from the Institute of Manpower Studies into the employment and utilisation of older workers. However, this exercise was mainly concerned with employers' recruitment practices, rather than whether discrimination occurred within the workplace itself.

Training

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his intention to provide all youth trainees, by negotiation, with personal training plans specifying the intended level of achievement, not necessarily in national vocational qualification terms but related to their own ability and aspirations and the needs of their actual or possible employment, and capable of change if the trainee, managing agent and employer agree it is necessary.

Mr. Jackson: I am currently reviewing the approach to ET and YT personal training plans with a view to introducing common procedure and terminology. We shall retain the principle of variation by agreement between trainee and training provider, and we shall as a minimum require a national vocational qualification or equivalent objective to be clearly stated. Training providers will be free, as now, to include other aspirations All training plans will be based on assessment of individual needs.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the extent to which youth training builds on existing strengths of managing agents acquired over years of adaptation.

Mr. Jackson: Youth training (YT) builds on the success of YTS in helping young people achieve qualifications and jobs. Training and enterprise councils have the responsibility for developing their networks of YT training providers in order to continue improving on the work already achieved through YTS.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to what extent youth training offers a service to all up to and including the age of 18 years not in full-time education, to start and complete work-related training.

Mr. Jackson: All young people under 18 who are not in full-time education or a job are guaranteed the offer of a suitable youth training (YT) place if they want one. YT helps eligible young people to acquire the broad-based skills necessary for a flexible and self-reliant work force and provides participants with training leading to national vocational qualifications at or above level II. Young people with special training needs receive appropriate training so that they can progress as far as possible towards general and vocational competences.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will arrange for high levels of payment for any trainees showing evidence of under-achievement in literacy and numeracy, in lieu of paying on achieving NVQ 2.

Mr. Jackson: Levels and methods of payment for training are entirely matters for local negotiation between training and enterprise councils and their training providers.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he will take to ensure that training and enterprise councils will be committed to securing excellence and quality of methods and outcomes of training.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) are required to draw up a strategy for securing quality training as part of their plans. The quality of training provided will be monitored by inspectors from my training standards advisory service.

Advertising

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much of the expenditure on (a) press advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) outdoor advertising, (d) regional campaigns, (e) exhibition material, (f) research and (g) presentations for action for jobs in 1987-88 was spent through the Central Office of Information.

Mr. Jackson: All the expenditure on press advertising, radio advertising, outdoor advertising and research for action for jobs in 1987-88 was spent through the Central Office of Information. Expenditure on action for jobs regional campaigns, presentations and exhibition material in 1987-88 was not placed through the Central Office of Information.

SCOTLAND

Steel

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the remit given to A. D. Little by the Scottish Development Agency extends to an examination of options for steel production at Hunterston.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the A. D. Little study includes conducting an examination of possible retrenchment of tube finishing within British Steel's diversified activities division; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the A. D. Little study into Scottish steel is to include an examination of seamless tube production and steelmaking at Clydesdale and the finishing process at the Imperial Works; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The remit given to A. D. Little by the Scottish Development Agency was broadly drawn. It requires it to carry out a wide-ranging analysis of the prospects and opportunities which may arise for the steel industry in any part of Scotland, taking into account Scotland's locational, resource and asset base; and to assess the commercial viability of any opportunities identified. The remit does not exclude consideration of any location within Scotland, nor does it include a requirement to examine operational decisions by British Steel.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to publish the A. D. Little preliminary report of December 1990 and its final report in 1991.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I cannot give a categorical assurance at this stage that all parts of the consultants' report will be published as some of these are likely to be commercially confidential. But I hope that it will be possible to publish the greater part of the study.

Statisticians

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many statisticians are employed in his Department; and how many are responsible for local authority statistics.

Mr. Lang: Of the 28 statisticians employed in the Scottish Office, 23 have some involvement with local authority statistics.

Consultancy Fees

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board the amount spent on consultancy fees for the year 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 21 November 1990]: Information available from the annual accounts of health boards relates to the total fees paid to management consultants, to legal firms (other than for legal expenses connected with compensation claims) and to work study consultants. The amounts for each health board for 1989-90 are shown in the table.

Health board	1989-90 £
Argyll and Clyde	87,915
Ayrshire and Arran	108,581
Borders	12,745
Dumfries and Galloway	119,382
Fife	51,065
Forth Valley	88,951
Grampian	125,599
Greater Glasgow	1,638,006
Highland	221,947
Lanarkshire	161,286
Lothian	473,223
Orkney	2,260
Shetland	3,368
Tayside	118,802
Western Isles	827
Total	3,213,957

Salmon

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Scottish Salmon Farmers Association; and if he will make a statement on the current situation in the salmon farming industry.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 23 November 1990]: Lord Sanderson of Bowden met representatives of the salmon farming industry (but not necessarily of the association) from time to time. My noble Friend Lord Strathclyde hopes to meet the Scottish Salmon Growers Association soon. This will provide a full opportunity to discuss current developments in the industry.

PRIME MINISTER

Security Services

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will bring forward proposals to make the security services accountable to Committees of the House.

The Prime Minister: No.

Press Conferences

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to discontinue the practice of confidential daily briefings for journalists at No. 10 Downing street in favour of open, on-the-record press conferences.

The Prime Minister: No.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister is he will put to the intergovernmental conference proposals to end majority voting in the Council of Ministers.

The Prime Minister: No.

European Central Bank

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the establishment of a European central bank; and what proposals Her Majesty's Government have to ensure that such a bank would be politically accountable.

The Prime Minister: The Government remain opposed to the imposition of a single monetary policy managed by a European Central Bank as prescribed in stage 3 of the Delors report.

The Government have instead put forward proposals for a hard ecu managed by a European monetary fund. We will negotiate constructively at the forthcoming intergovernmental conference on the basis of these proposals in the hope and expectation that we can agree an outcome which satisfies the House of Commons and our European partners.

European Parliament

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what facilities are currently available to Members of the European Parliament within the United Kingdom Parliament and to United Kingdom Members of Parliament in the European Parliament; and what proposals exist for improving these arrangements.

The Prime Minister: At Strasbourg Members have access to all areas adjacent to the main debating chamber and, by invitation, can attend specialist committees of the European Parliament. At Westminster, United Kingdom MEPs have access to the Peers Galleries and Lobby and offices of the European Communities Office in the House of Lords. In this House they have access by photo-identity pass to the Central Lobby, the Lower and Upper Waiting Halls and the Committee Corridor.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on strengthening the powers of the European Parliament.

The Prime Minister: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs said during the debate on the Address on 8 November, we would like to strengthen the European Parliament's role in monitoring Community expenditure.

Community Legislation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will bring forward proposals to strengthen the scrutiny of Community legislation by national Parliaments.

The Prime Minister: It is for each national Parliament to decide its own procedures for the scrutiny of Community legislative proposals. The growing interest in the need for effective arrangements is encouraging.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will seek to spread the best practices of national Parliaments to enhance national scrutiny of, and commitment to, proposals emanating from the European Community.

The Prime Minister: We have repeatedly made clear the need for national Parliaments to become more closely involved in Community affairs, and for effective national scrutiny procedures. Our own procedures are widely regarded as among the most thorough in the Community.

Intergovernmental Conferences

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place copies of the agenda of the intergovernmental conferences in the Vote Office.

The Prime Minister: No agendas have been set for the intergovernmental conferences; the IGCs themselves will decide how to organise their work.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to consult the House by means of debate before going to the intergovernmental conferences in December.

The Prime Minister: There will be a debate in the House on 6 December on developments in the EC prior to the Rome European Council. This will, among other subjects, look forward to the intergovernmental conferences which start on 15 December.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what items have been tabled for discussion at each of the intergovernmental conferences in December.

The Prime Minister: The intergovernmental conferences will set their own agenda. They will consider the various proposals made by member states, as well as the opinions delivered by the European Parliament and the Commission on the calling of the IGCs.

European Community (Accountability)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what action the Government are proposing to strengthen the democratic accountability of the European Community.

The Prime Minister: The Government have suggested ways to increase the Community's financial accountability to the European Parliament and involve national parliaments more closely in Community affairs. Improved scrutiny procedures have recently been introduced in this House.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will propose the adoption of a clear statement of the lines of subsidiarity between European and national institutions of the intergovernmental conference by those European and national institutions.

The Prime Minister: We hope that the forthcoming intergovernmental conference will agree a clear definition of the principle of subsidiarity in order to clarify the division of responsibility between national Governments and the Community.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government in seeking a revaluation of the pound sterling within the ERM.

The Prime Minister: On sterling's entry to the ERM, the Government undertook an express obligation to keep sterling within specified bands around the agreed central rates. We are fully committed to fulfilling that obligation.

Period of Office

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will consider bringing forward proposals to limit the period that any one individual may serve as Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister: No.

Community Charge

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Prime Minister if he will ensure, as one result of his recently announced poll tax review, that the Welsh and Scottish Departments collate and publish the same breadth of regular poll tax statistics as those produced by the Department of the Environment.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies that I gave to the right hon. Member for Islwyn (Mr. Kinnock) on 29 November at column 1010.

Social Security Legislation

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if the Government intend to introduce any changes to the social security legislation to allow local authorities again to operate discretionary rebate schemes.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 30 November 1990]: Local authorities already have the discretion to disregard war widows pension and war disablement pension in excess of the statutory £10 disregard when assessing housing benefit and community charge benefit entitlement. They also have the power to grant extra benefit to individual claimants in exceptional circumstances. We have no present plans to extend the scope of these powers.

European Convention on Human Rights

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will now support the incorporation of the European convention on human rights.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 30 November 1990]: No.

Classless Society

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what measures he intends to take to bring about a classless society.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 30 November 1990]: Measures to extend opportunity further will be brought forward in due course.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what capacity the automated low-flying enquiry and notification system will have to trace the routes taken by low-flying aircraft, as an aid to aircraft identification in the event of a public complaint;

(2) what capacity the automated low-flying enquiry and notification system will have to produce graphic presentations showing the geographical distribution of military low-level air traffic, as an aid to management of the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: For the reasons set out in my Department's evidence to the Defence Committee's inquiry on low-flying (Official Report 120, pages 158 and 174), the ALFENS system is not intended to store detailed route information for routine daytime low-flying sorties in the United Kingdom which would be necessary to provide the capabilities mentioned. The system should, however, provide a more rapid means of tracing individual aircraft and of analysing the usage of individual low-flying areas.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what period the figures for operational low-flying movements in the Borders tactical training area, provided in his reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley of 14 June, Official Report, column 325, refer; and if he will list the equivalent figure for the period 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The figures for operational low-flying movements in the Borders tactical training area provided in the reply which my hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mr. Neubert) gave to the hon. Member on 14 June 1990 related to the periods specified in that reply. The equivalent figure for the period 1 July 1989 to 30 June 1990 is 2,025.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what length of time records of individual bookings into the United Kingdom low-flying system are retained.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Such records are normally retained for three years.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying movements at less than 250 ft were authorised in each of the tactical training areas in each month since January; and on how many days in each month such activity was authorised in each area.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In 1990 the number of movements authorised for flying below 250 ft within tactical training areas has been as follows:

Low flying 1990	Northern Scotland		Central Wales		Borders
	Operational of which movements	Number of days low flying authorised	Operational of which movements	Number of days low flying authorised	Operational of which movements	Number of days authorised
January	72	14	6	5	149	14
February	26	20	1	10	347	20
March	436	18	15	15	413	20
April	118	17	2	12	216	17
May	340	13	0	2	185	12
June	8	5	6	5	68	5
July	3	15	0	0	72	17
August	74	[1]	97	[1]	530	[1]
September	49	[1]	71	[1]	714	[1]
October	74	[1]	32	[1]	709	[1]

[1] Since 9 August, all three tactical training areas have been made available for operational low flying training on weekdays and, exceptionally in the case of the Borders TTA, on Saturday 11 August, to enable essential aircrew workup training to take place associated with the United Kingdom's commitment in the Gulf.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the reason for his Department's policy of not retaining central records showing operational low-flying movements in the eastern and western parts of the Borders tactical training area separately.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There is no such policy. Operational low-flying movements in the eastern and western parts of the Borders tactical training area have been shown separately in central records since September 1989.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what authorisation was given for low-flying below 250 ft over the United Kingdom on Saturday 17 and Sunday 18 November; what was the area for which any such authorisation was given; how many sorties took place as a result; what types of aircraft and units were involved; and what was the purpose of the training.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Operational low-flying training in the Borders tactical training area was exceptionally authorised over the weekend of 17-18 November for Tornado aircrew conducting training connected with our current commitment in the Gulf. However, in the event, no such low flying took place.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if bookings into the Borders tactical training area east and the Borders tactical training area west are recorded separately by the RAF tactical booking cell at West Drayton.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what year Royal Air Force fast jet pilots were first formally qualified to fly at 100 ft.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information requested is not readily available, but there has been a requirement for a very limited amount of such flying for many years and this predates the introduction of the present United Kingdom low flying system in 1979.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the United States air force F-15 aircraft deployed to RAF Leuchars (a) during the period 17 to 28 June and (b) in the week commencing 16 July, were permitted to conduct low-flying over the United Kingdom during their deployment.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: United States air force F-15 aircraft deployed to RAF Leuchars were permitted to make very limited use of the United Kingdom low-flying system during the period 19 to 28 June, weekends excepted, in support of joint maritime course 90/2. No F-15 aircraft were deployed to RAF Leuchars during week commencing 16 July 1990.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effect the agreed changes in readiness and availability of Royal Air Force forces, referred to in his reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley on 1 November, Official Report, column 761, will have on the low-flying training requirements of (a) Royal Air Force, Germany, and (b) United Kingdom-based Royal Air Force units.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I do not expect the measures agreed so far to have any immediate effect on the Royal Air Force's requirement for low-flying training.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there have been any occasions since June 1988 on which (a) the Borders tactical training area west has been activated at a time when the Borders tactical training area east is not activated and (b) the Borders tactical training area east has been activated at a time when the Borders tactical training area west is not activated.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No.

Harrier GR7

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which will be the first Royal Air Force squadron to equip with the Harrier GR7; and when it will begin flying training on the type.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. 4 Squadron received the Harrier GR7 aircraft and commenced flying training on the type in October this year.

RAF Tornados

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the deployment of six additional Royal Air Force Tornados to Goose bay, Canada, in June.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A detachment of six Royal Air Force Tornado F3 aircraft deployed to Goose bay in June to carry out training in conjunction with other Royal Air Force and allied aircraft carrying out low-level training there.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the operational availability of the RAF Tornado aircraft currently on active service in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Excellent operational availability is being achieved by the Royal Air Force's Tornado aircraft, which are making a highly potent and valued contribution to the allied air forces deployed to the Gulf.

RAF Harrier (Dive Attack)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the location of the dive attack referred to in his Department's evidence to the Defence Committee (HC 120, page 180) concerning an incident involving a Royal Air Force Harrier on 8 July 1988.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Member on 1 November 1990 at column 765.

Kuwait Liberation Army

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he has discussed with his Arab and United States of America counterparts in respect of the activities of the group known as the Kuwait liberation army, and its trainers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am not aware of any group by that name.

NATO Forward Scatter Sites

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether any decision has been made on the future of the NATO forward scatter sites; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) was the outcome of the meeting at SHAPE on 24 September on the future of the NATO forward scatter sites; and when his officials first informed the Defence Police Federation of decisions taken.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO is considering the future of its ACE HIGH communications network. The sites which host ACE HIGH installations are being examined concurrently in connection with national communication requirements. The Defence Police Federation has been made aware of developments informally and will be advised in the normal way when the way forward is known.

Security Guards

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if a decision has been made on the arming of his Department's new security guard force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The arrangements for the established of the proposed new guard service are under consideration. No decision has been taken on whether any elements of it should be armed.

Operation Granby

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there is anything further he can announce about the effect of Operation Granby on the defence cash and running cost limits for this financial year.

Mr. Tom King: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary revised supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:

(1) Defence Cash Limits

£000s

Class and vote	Current cash limit	Increase	Revised cash limit
I, 1	9,008,295	100,000	9,108,295
I, 2	8,744,597	200,000	8,944,597

These changes, which increase the block defence cash limit by £300,000,000 from £21,585,449,000 to £21,885,449,000 are for costs arising from the deployments of British forces to the Gulf area.

(2) Running Cost Limit

Within this the running costs limit for the Department will be increased by £90,000,000 from £5,272,678,000 to £5,362,678,000.

The increases were not allowed for within the forecast outturn planning total included in the Chancellor's autumn statement.

Data Logic Ltd.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the nature of the outstanding issues that resulted in the special extra-contractual payment that was made to Data Logic Ltd.

Mr. Alan Clark: Payment was made in respect of work carried out by Data Logic Ltd. up to the termination of the contract. Issues concerning the extent of conformance of the proposed functional specifications with the army cataloguing authority's requirements brought this work outside the terms of the contract.

Appropriation Accounts

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the numbers and civil service grades of the engineering staff involved in the transaction referred to in his reply of 30 October, Official Report, column 507; what is the name of the contractor involved; what disciplinary action was taken against the engineering staff involved in this transaction; and what steps have been taken to ensure that the staff involved are not employed by the contractor in this transaction after their retirement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The matter is the subject of an internal investigation and I cannot comment further at the moment.

Civil Service Appeal Board

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why his Department decided to take no disciplinary action against those representatives of his Department who were in communication with members of the Civil Service Appeal Board prior to Mr. Colin Wallace's appeal in 1975.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No breach of discipline occurred in connection with this communication which would justify action being taken against anyone.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his policy on permitting representatives of his Department to communicate with members of the Civil Service Appeal Board on matters relating to individuals whose cases are due to come before the board;

(2) on how many occasions in the past 20 years representatives of his Department have communicated with members of the Civil Service Appeal Board on matters relating to individuals whose cases are due to come before the board.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has many contacts of a routine administrative character with the Civil Service Appeal Board; detailed statistics of these are not kept. As I indicated in my letter of 13 September to my hon. Friend the Member for Arundel (Sir M. Marshall) (of which a copy was placed in the Library), we would not now place before members of the board evidence not available in formal proceedings.

Military Occupation

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether any plans have been made since 1960 for military operations in the event of a foreign military occupation of the United Kingdom;

(2) what plans currently exist for military operations in the event of a foreign military occupation of the United Kingdom;

(3) what contact has taken place with Greek Government officials regarding planning for operations in the event of a foreign military occupation of Greece.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the Government's practice to comment on such questions.

Austrian Airspace

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions apply to the transport of military equipment from bases in Germany to the Gulf area through Austrian airspace; what problems and costs have arisen from the restrictions; and if any request has been made to the Austrian authorities for the relaxation of the restrictions.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The details of bilateral arrangements with other countries covering military overflights are classified and it is not the Government's policy to comment on such matters.

United States Forces Housing

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all housing projects for the United States forces based in the United Kingdom for which appropriated funds were requested from the United States Congress in the last five fiscal years, giving for each project its location, which fiscal year the money was requested, how many dwellings were planned, and whether it has been approved by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 30 November 1990]: I understand that the only housing construction project funded by United States appropriated funds in the United Kingdom during the last five United States fiscal years was for department of defense personnel at Menwith Hill approved in United States fiscal year 1986; 14 housing units were built, with local authority planning approval and Her Majesty's Government's consent.

ENERGY

Mersey Oil Pipeline

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to publish the report into the failure of the Mersey oil pipeline.

Mr. Wakeham: I have today published the report, and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Accountability

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to improve ministerial accountability to Parliament.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 3 December 1990]: Ministers are already fully accountable to Parliament.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Aid

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if his Department plans to make any representations to the European Commission about allowing United Kingdom objective 2 regions to be eligible for assistance under the European Commission's Telematique programme;

(2) if his Department plans to make any representations to the European Commission about allowing United Kingdom objective 2 regions to be eligible for assistance under the PRISMA initiative.

Mr. Leigh: The European Commission has decided that the proposed Telematique and PRISMA initiatives should be restricted to objective 1 regions, which include Northern Ireland. The Commission's decision took account of the requirement in article 12(5) of Council regulation (EEC) No. 2052/88 about devoting approximately 80 per cent. of the European regional development fund to objective 1. Other Community initiatives, notably RECHAR, apply in objective 2 regions.

Commercial opportunities arising from expenditure in objective 1 regions under Telematique and PRISMA will of course be available to companies throughout the United Kingdom.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the extent to which United Kingdom regions will benefit from the European Community's STRIDE programme.

Mr. Leigh: The European Commission's STRIDE initiative will provide support from the European Community structural funds for research and development projects and technology transfer in Northern Ireland and in objective 2 regions in Great Britain. The Commission has indicated a financial allocation to the United Kingdom of 28 mecu (about £20 million) until 1993.

Drambuie Liqueur Company

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will prosecute the directors of the Drambuie Liqueur Company for failure to file up-to-date accounts under sections 242 and 244 of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Redwood: The accounts for Drambuie Liqueur Company were received at Companies house on 31 October 1990; therefore, section 244 does not apply.

Task Forces

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the location and number of task forces which have been set up, together with a list of their functions and budgets.

Mr. Leigh: There are five business task forces located in DTI headquarters divisions. Their functions cover certain specific tasks on commodities and steel, aircraft and aero-engines, shipbuilding, vehicles and market opportunities. The main budgets for which they are responsible are as follows:

	1990-91 Estimates/ provision £ million
Development of the EH101 helicopter	12·5
Development of the A330/340 airliners	134·0
(Launch aid levy receipts	73·7)
Home shipbuilding credit guarantee scheme	43·5
Shipbuilding intervention fund	25·0
Assistance to redundant steelworkers	16·3
Civil aircraft research and demonstration	25·4

Details of these budgets are set out in the Supply Estimates 1990-91 (class IV Trade and Industry) and in chapter 4 of the "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1990-91 to 1992-93" (Cm 1004).

As my Department's contribution to the Government's action for cities programme, there are 16 inner-city task forces. Their function is to generate enterprise in defined areas of particular deprivation and to create training and employment opportunities for the residents of those areas. In aggregate their budget for expenditure on projects in 1990-91 is £20·4 million. Task forces are located in:

- London (4)
  - West (North Kensington and Hammersmith)
  - Spitalfields
  - Deptford
  - North Peckham
- Birmingham
- Bradford
- Bristol
- Coventry
- Derby
- Hartlepool
- Leeds
- Manchester
- Merseyside (2)
  - Toxteth (Liverpool)
  - Wirral (Birkenhead)
- Middlesbrough
- Nottingham

Mortgages

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to bring all mortgages under the Financial Services Act and to instruct tied agents and direct salesmen to display their status in advertisements, correspondence and premises.

Mr. Redwood: The investment element of mortgages is already subject to the requirements of the Financial Services Act. The display by tied agents and direct salesmen of their status is a matter for the regulatory body concerned.

Industry Council

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Community Industry Council held on 26 November.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 3 December 1990:] The Industry Council meeting on 26 November, which Lord Hesketh attended for the United Kingdom, adopted a directive on aid for the Community shipbuilding industry and considered a communication from the Commission on industrial policy. The Council also discussed a Commission proposal to extend the patent term for pharmaceuticals, the industrial implications of the Uruguay round, the future of the ECSC treaty and Community craft industries.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

UNRWA

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the increase of contributions to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency made by Council of Europe member states at the recent pledging conference.

Mrs. Chalker: At the November pledging conference at the United Nations General Assembly, donor countries announced contributions to UNRWA for 1991 totalling almost US$200 million. Of this Council of Europe member states have so far pledged some US$73 million.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Governors

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he gives to local education authorities about the extent of the counselling they should give to school governing bodies under the local management of schools.

Mr. Fallon: It is for local education authorities to determine the amount, nature and timetable of training and support for school governors, in the light of local needs. Plans for governor support and training must be included in Schemes for the local management of schools. Over the four years 1989-90 to 1992-93, the Government will be supporting expenditure of around £247 million on the implementation of LMS. Some £24 million will be spent directly on support and training for school governors; other expenditure on equipping all schools with management information systems, and training school administrative staff to use them; on helping LEAs to implement their LMS schemes; on management training for heads and other senior teachers; and, from 1991-92, on support for the administration costs of schools with delegated budgets, will also help governors exercise their new responsibilities.

Teachers

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will change their conditions of service to allow teachers adequate time for planning, preparation and assessment resulting from the introduction of the national curriculum.

Mr. Eggar: The use of teachers' directed time, and in particular its division between teaching and non-teaching duties, is a matter for head teachers to decide.

Education Spending

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was spending per pupil in 1979 and in the latest available year for which figures are available in each of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The readily available data are as follows:

Public re-current expenditure per pupil[1] in calendar years at 1985 prices

	1st level		2nd level		1st and 2nd levels
	1983	1986	1983	1986	1983	1986

[2] Public expenditure including subsidies to private education and pupils/students in public and private education.

[3] Public sector education only.

[4] Public expenditure only. First level includes primary education from 5 years of age. Second level includes secondary and further education.

[5] Includes students and expenditure on courses some of which may be equated with second level education.

Child Protection Teachers

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much his Department is making available in the current financial year in support of the community education development centre's project to assist local education authorities in the training of teachers designated by schools as child protection teachers; and how many teachers are currently covered by the scheme.

Mr. Fallon: Up to £35,000 is being made available for this purpose by the Department in the current financial year. The principal objective of the project is to train the trainers of designated teachers. Thus, for every local education authority that takes up the offer of the courses, the designated teacher in each of their schools will benefit; and other teachers will also benefit from the knowledge and awareness spread through the schools by the designated teachers. About one sixth of local education authorities have so far participated in the scheme, and more courses are scheduled.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the budget for grant support towards the cost incurred by local education authorities undertaking training of staff in child protection for the years from 1979-80 to 1990-91.

Mr. Fallon: Sums have not been separately identified within grant programmes for this area of training. It is for each local education authority to determine what provision to make to meet local circumstances, taking account of the various sources of income available to it, including general revenue support grant and the LEA training grants scheme.

AFRC Staff

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of (a) scientific and (b) non-scientific staff that are employed at each of the Agricultural and Food Research Council institutes; what are his estimates for 1991, 1992 and 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The figures for scientific and non-scientific staff in post on 1 April 1990 and the estimated number of staff in post on 1 April 1991 for each Agricultural and Food Research Council (AFRC) institute are as follows:

	1990		[1] 1991
	Scientific	Non-scientific	Scientific	Non-scientific
IACR	449	251	433	246
IAH	292	228	283	227
IAPGR	337	222	321	208
IER	115	194	103	163
IFR	381	171	245	131
IGER	308	224	285	209
IPSR	234	92	234	92
TOTAL	2,116	1,382	1,904	1,276

[1] Estimate.

IACR —Institute of Arable Crops Research.
IAH —Institute for Animal Health.
IAPGR—Institute of Animal Physiology and Genetics.
IER —Institute of Engineering Research.
IFR —Institute of Food Research.
IGER —Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research.
IPSR —Institute of Plant Science Research.

In addition, 295 scientific and 269 non-scientific AFRC staff were seconded to the British Society of Horticultural Research (since renamed Horticulture Research International) on 1 April 1990. The estimated numbers of these staff for 1 April 1991 are 260 and 245 respectively.

The number of staff employed on 1 April 1992 and 1 April 1993 will depend on a number of factors, including the funding available to the AFRC through the science budget and the extent of commissions from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and externally funded research. The present estimate is that the number of scientific staff employed by the AFRC at its institutes and Horticulture Research International will be about 1,960 and the number of non-scientific staff will be about 1,400 on each date. No breakdown of anticipated staffing levels at each AFRC institute is available.

19-year-olds (Non-advanced Education)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his best estimate of the numbers of 19-year-olds in full-time non-advanced education.

Mr. Eggar: In 1989-90, there were 19,000 full-time students aged 19 in further education in England.

SERC Report

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received the annual report of the Science and Engineering Research Council for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The annual report of the Science and Engineering Research Council for 1989-90 has been submitted to my right hon. and learned Friend under the requirements of the Science and Technology Act 1965, and a copy is being placed before the House today.

My right hon. and learned Friend and I were pleased to note a number of significant achievements through council activity during the past year, including:

(a) the inauguration of, and initial results from, the large electron positron (LEP) collider at CERN, the laboratory for European particle physics research in Geneva;

(b) the successful completion of the Solar Maximum mission; as part of which United Kingdom instruments on board this NASA satellite provided detailed data about the Sun; and

(c) a 10-year project at City university, resulting in a heightened ability to detect or correct faults in the electricity grid system; and

(d) collaborative research at Oxford university, jointly funded by SERC and Rolls-Royce plc, to increase understanding of gas flows and heat transfer in turbine blades.

Following these achievements in the past year, we now look forward to learning SERC's new assessment of scientific priorities following the review of forward activities now under way.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Funds

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all organisations in Denton and Reddish constituency receiving training funds.

Mr. Jackson: There are five organisations in Denton and Reddish constituency receiving training funds through contracts with the Manchester TEC and the Stockport and High Peak TEC. The CCE business centre, Windmill lane, Denton is contracted to provide employment training. The other organisations receive funds under the business growth training programme. These contracts are commercial-in-confidence and names cannot be given.

Training

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what commitment his Department offers to training schemes specifically aimed at encouraging women to return to work.

Mr. Jackson: My Department's work to promote women's participation in training has been based on the requirement that all training providers implement a positive commitment to equal opportunities. Action has therefore been directed at removing the barriers that women encounter in reconciling training with their domestic commitments and allowing them access to the full range of programmes. The training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies are addressing the specific needs of women returners and providing training schemes that meet them.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Antarctica

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy in respect of future mining options in Antarctica.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have tabled, and are seeking support for, an environmental protocol to the Antarctic treaty, but we believe there can be no comprehensive system for the protection of the Antarctic environment that does not deal with the longer term issue of minerals. We therefore see the need to reach agreement on a legally binding instrument to address the question of minerals before the need for it arises.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to direct the British delegation to the meeting of the Antarctic treaty parties in Chile to make clear their support for the declaration of a world park in Antarctica.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The British delegation to the XIth special consultative meeting of Antarctic treaty parties is prepared to discuss all proposals which could lead to a return to consensus within the Antarctic treaty.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with Christian Salvesen in respect of plans to remove hazardous materials and waste from their abandoned whaling station on South Georgia.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Officials of this Department have held discussions over the past year with Christian Salvesen plc about pollutants at the four disused whaling stations on South Georgia of which the company are the leaseholders. An operation to clean up the stations, funded jointly by Christian Salvesen and the Administration of South Georgia, will start shortly.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his present policy in respect of the declaration of a world park in Antarctica.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We remain committed to achieving the best possible environmental protection for Antarctica, and to this end, regard the maintenance of the Antarctic treaty system and a return to consensus within it as essential. Whilst we do not see any merit in calling it a world park—it is already a "Special Conservation Area" under the 1964 agreed measures for the conservation of Antarctic fauna and flora—we are prepared to discuss all proposals to protect the Antarctic environment.

Civil Nuclear Facilities, Iraq

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the intentions of the safeguards authorities of the International Atomic Energy Agency to inspect civil nuclear facilities in Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The IAEA announced on 27 November that their inspectors had carried out a safeguards inspection in Iraq and had concluded that all material under safeguards could be accounted for.

British Embassy, Washington

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in connection with the recent visit by the First Secretary of the British embassy in Washington, Mr. Sherard Cowper-Coles, to the conference in Boston hosted by the Investor Responsor Research Centre, what costs were involved in (a) travelling, (b) accommodation, (c) entertainment and (d) other expenses.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The costs were as follows:

	US$
(a) Travelling	371·00
(b) Accommodation	108·85
(c) Entertainment	None
(d) Other expenses (meals)	69·15

	US$
Total	549·00

Iran

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has made with regard to the imprisonment of (a) Fatemeh Hosseinzadeh Tussi Moghadam, (b) Dr. Fatemeh Izadi and (c) Nahid Dorudiahi by the Islamic Republic of Iran;

(2) what representations he has made with regard to the imprisonment of (a) Malekeh Mohammadi, (b) Zohach Ghaeni and (c) Mariam Firouz by the Islamic Republic of Iran.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. But we note that the persons in question are mentioned in the report of the UN special representative on human rights in Iran, Mr. Galindo Pohl, and that he has called on the Iranian Government to respond in detail to the allegations of abuses of human rights put to them.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is making representations to the Islamic Republic of Iran on their human rights record.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Together with our partners in the European Community, we are seeking a resolution in the third committee of the United Nations which reflects the state of human rights in Iran. This is a matter we take very seriously.

Bulgaria

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the need for humanitarian aid in Bulgaria; how much humanitarian aid has been given by the United Kingdom to Bulgaria; and what plans the Government has for future humanitarian aid to Bulgaria.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are contributing to humanitarian aid through the European Community's PHARE aid programme. The Community has recently approved a mother and child health support programme worth approximately £3·5 million. We have encouraged the Commission to consider urgently Bulgarian requests for humanitarian aid (including food and medical supplies). The question was last discussed during the meeting of the EC-Bulgaria Joint Commission on 30 November.

Syria

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is making to the Syrian Government on their human rights record.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Like any other Government, the Syrian Government are well aware of our position on human rights. Following the resumption of diplomatic relations with Syria, we shall be better placed to make representations when this is justified.

Kurdistan

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government will put Kurdistan and the situation of Kurdish people on the agenda of any future peace conference on the middle east.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We cannot at this stage outline the agenda of any future middle east peace conference. We expect the rights of all peoples in the region, including the Kurds, to be respected by the Governments of the countries in which they live. We do not recognise an independent Kurdish state. The frontiers of states in the region are set by international treaty.

Saudi Arabia

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is making representations to the Saudi Arabian Government on their human rights record.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Saudi Government are well aware of the importance we attach to the observance of human rights standards.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Drainage Authorities

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those occasions in the past five years when he has used his powers under the Land Drainage Act 1976 or the Water Act 1989 to give directions to a regional or local flood defence committee of the National Rivers Authority, or their equivalent under previous legislation in cases where they are promoting a specific land drainage or flood defence scheme which does not accord with his priorities.

Mr. Curry: Powers to give such directions in relation to capital land drainage or flood defence schemes have only been available since the coming into force of the Water Act 1989. No direction could therefore be given under the Land Drainage Act 1976, and none has so far been given under the Water Act 1989.

Feedstuff Additives

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals to restrict the use of canthaxanthin as an animal feedstuff additive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have accepted the expert advice of the Food Advisory Committee that the use of canthaxanthin as a feed additive should cease and I have asked the EC Commission to urgently review the data on the toxicity of canthaxanthin in order to achieve concerted EC action to prohibit its use in feed. The EC Commission has responded promptly by referring the matter to its expert scientific committee, the Scientific Committee on Animal Nutrition. This committee is urgently considering data supplied by the United Kingdom.

Grain

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the quantity and value of grain produced in the United Kingdom in each year since 1979 stating value in real and 1990 prices.

Mr. Curry: The table shows information on the tonnage of cereals produced and the available information on its value. Following standard practice, valuations are only made of (net) off-farm sales and of changes in on-farm stocks; cereals used directly on-farms are not valued. The valuations are at current prices (ie the prices pertaining in each year) and at 1985 prices.

Production and Output of Cereals in the United Kingdom

Gramoxone

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the use of Gramoxone; whether his Department is aware of any impact of this product on the population of the brown hare; if he is conducting any relevant research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The use of Gramoxone (active ingredient paraquat) is monitored regularly as part of the rolling survey of pesticide usage carried out by Agriculture Departments, the results of which are published. It has been alleged to cause mortality in brown hares but exhaustive tests carried out by MAFF scientists have failed to establish any link. Another possibility is a virus disease, similar to one found in rabbits, which has been detected in several European countries. To pinpoint the real cause farmers have been asked to report all suspicious deaths of brown hares. Their carcases will be checked for viral symptoms in addition to the normal tests for pesticides.

Market Support and Grant Schemes

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the market support schemes and (b) the grant schemes operated by his Ministry for which financial resources do not come from the European Community.

Mr. Gummer: Market support schemes and grant schemes are listed, together with their financial provision in the supply estimates. Figures for the previous 10 years are available in the publication "Agriculture in the United Kingdom 1989" and in the annual review of agriculture White Papers. These publications are available in the Library of the House.

Fishermen Research Centres

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of (a) scientists and (b) non-scientific staff employed at his fisheries research centres since 1980, including those expected to be employed in 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Gummer: The numbers of staff are broken down as follows:

	1980	1990
Scientific, professional and technical staff	256	251½
Marine staff	88	51
Others (including e.g. administrative and support staff)	134½	101½
Totals (excluding casuals)	478½	404

The manpower numbers at the Directorate of Fisheries Research in 1991-92 will depend upon the estimates for my Department's 1991-92 running costs which are still being finalised.

Suckler Cow Premium

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to make the recently announced payments of the suckler cow premium.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given on 26 November at column 324 to my hon. Friend the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill).

Chief Veterinary Officer's Report

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to publish the report of his chief veterinary officer on animal health for 1990.

Mr. Gummer: My Department is intending to publish the report of the Chief Veterinary Officer—"Animal Health 1990"—on 3 July 1991.

Agricultural and Food Research Council

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the loss of 380 jobs at the Agricultural and Food Research Council.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have been asked to reply.

The AFRC has announced that an estimated 380 posts will be lost in 1990-91 as a result of a combination of factors, including reductions in commissioned work as a consequence of the Government's "near-market" policy, an anticipated reduction in contracts work from the private sector, and the restructuring of AFRC institutes.

I am confident that the AFRC, which is an independent, chartered body, will continue to make every effort to hold redundancies to a minimum by deploying staff threatened with redundancy to other posts, with retraining as required.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to ensure that slaughterhouses in Northern Ireland meet European Community export standards.

Mr. Brooke: Of the 33 slaughterhouses in Northern Ireland, 27 are already approved for intra-Community trade. Required European Community standards are enforced by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland.

Grammar Schools (Intake)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision he has made in respect of the intake allowed into grammar schools in Northern Ireland where there is a number of children of Regular Army personnel in the intake and where the number of children in a yearly cohort is affected by the transfer of such children to those schools from elsewhere when their parents are transferred to Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: Admissions are a matter for individual school boards of governors, and the children of regular Army personnel resident in Northern Ireland are catered for within the normal arrangements. Schools are required to admit pupils up to their approved admissions number and to apply admissions criteria if they are over-subscribed. The admission of children from schools outside Northern Ireland is also a matter for individual schools, but the Department of Education is prepared to consider applications for an increase in school admissions numbers in cases where there are extenuating circumstances.

Nursery Education

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many places in nursery education are available in (a) Belfast city and (b) each education and library board area in Northern Ireland; and in each case how many are (i) in the integrated school system, (ii) in controlled schools, (iii) in maintained schools and (iv) in other schools, respectively.

Dr. Mawhinney: Details of full-time equivalent nursery pupil places for each education and library board are as follows:

Board area	Controlled			Maintained
	Nursery school places	Nursery classes in primary schools-places	Total places	Nursery school places	Nursery classes in primary schools-places	Total places	Total places nursery schools and places

[1] Coterminous with the Belfast city council area.

There is no grant-aided nursery provision in integrated schools or in other schools.

Government of Northern Ireland

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his reply of 28 November 1990, Official Report, column 399, what is meant by the term "Government of Northern Ireland" in note (5) to the table; and to whom in Northern Ireland the present Government are answerable.

Mr. Brooke: The reference in note (5) to the table in my reply of 28 November, is to Northern Ireland Departments which, under the Northern Ireland Act 1974, are subject to my direction and control. The VAT Act 1983 Section (49) provides for refunds to "the Government of Northern Ireland".

WALES

National Library and National Museum

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many visits he has made to (a) the national library of Wales and (b) the national museum of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend visited the national museum in September and plans to take up the invitation of the president to visit the national library of Wales at an early opportunity.

National Library

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to visit the national library of Wales to meet staff members to discuss the future of the library.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Torfaen (Mr. Murphy) on 31 October which explained the procedures for dealing with staff inspection reports.

Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he proposes to enhance training in rural Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The new training and enterprise councils are locally based and run by local employers in partnership with the local community; this will ensure that the needs of a rural economy are catered for effectively. A new all-Wales Agricultural Training Board has been established, with a headquarters at Builth Wells, to meet the training needs of the industry. It will work closely with the TECs and in due course, after the necessary primary legislation, it will be able to extend its remit beyond the strict confines of the agricultural industry.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of day centre and day hospital places for mentally handicapped people in Wales currently; and what was the comparable figure in 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: There were 3,499 places in local authority day care, training and employment facilities for mentally handicapped people on 31 March 1990. At 31 March 1979, there were 2,540 places in local authority adult training centres for mentally handicapped people. The increase between 1979 and 1990 is nearly 38 per cent.

There were 22,484 place-days—that is, the number of places times the number of days the place was available —in NHS day care facilities for mentally handicapped people in the year from 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990. This is equivalent to an average of 62 continuously available places over the year. Comparable information for 1979 is not available.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many planning appeals were brought in each of the years 1986 to 1989 in relation to each local planning authority in Wales; how many were allowed; and what was the overall cost to his Department of the planning appeal system in each of those years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The numbers of planning appeals brought and allowed are given in the table.

For the financial year 1989-90 the cost of the appeal system was £1,006,200. I regret that figures for earlier years are not available.

Marina, Aberystwyth

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to build a marina in Aberystwyth during the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Ceredigion district council submitted a scheme for the development of a marina at Aberystwyth harbour as a project of regional or national importance. An announcement on this and other applications will be made in the House shortly.

Textile and Knitwear Industry

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the future of the textile and knitwear industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Several. I am aware that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, who has policy responsibility for the textile and knitwear industry, has also received representations. I will ensure that he is aware of any views expressed by the industry in Wales.

Flood Damage

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sums from public funds were paid to (a) local authorities, (b) private firms and (c) private individuals to repair damage caused by floods in Wales in February; for what purposes such sums were paid; how much of these sums were paid by central Government and for what purposes they were used; and what sums were paid by councils and for what purposes they were used.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Pembrokeshire Health Authority

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the formal expression of interest by Pembrokeshire health authority in becoming an all-authority national health service trust.

Mr. David Hunt: No, but if a formal application is submitted, a copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the total budget of family practitioner committees for the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and the predicted forecast for the year 1990-91; and if he will itemise the family practitioner committee budget breakdown for each health authority for each of the years identified above.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The financial allocations made to family practitioner committees in Wales—re-titled family health services authorities from 17 September 1990) for their administration revenue expenditure are shown in table 1.

Apart from identifying separately the amounts built in for certain fixed costs, over which an FHSA has no discretion, these cash-limited budgets are not disaggregated into discrete items when they are allocated. It is for each FHSA to decide how its administration revenue budget is best used in accordance with statutory requirements and such directions and guidance as might be given to them.

In addition to their administration revenue budgets, FHSAs are responsible with effect from the present financial year, for delegated, cash-limited, budgets covering expenditure on a proportion of general medical practitioners' practice staff and premises costs. These are shown for each FHSA in Wales at table 2.

Housing

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest figure for the number of private sector starts in the housing market in Wales; and what has been the increase since 1979.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Ten thousand and ninety five private sector starts were recorded during 1989—2,509 or 24·9 per cent. more than the 7,586 started in 1979.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each county in Wales his estimate available of the number of people in that county with problems of alcohol misuse.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The only available data are provided in the Welsh heart health survey of 1985, which recorded people drinking in excess of "safe limits" defined by the Health Promotion Authority for Wales. These are 20-plus units per week for men and 15-plus units for women. The figures are as follows:

1990 data will become available next year.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the finances available to his Department and allocated by his Department to combat alcohol misuse in each of the financial years 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90; if he will indicate the amounts initially available in 1990-91, and any additional sums made available by his Department for this purpose since the start of the financial year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Responsibility for tackling alcohol misuse rests primarily with health and local authorities. The Health Promotion Authority for Wales has a role in primary prevention and many voluntary organisations participate as part of their overall activity. Finances to these organisations are unhypothecated and it is not possible separately to identify that element earmarked for combating alcohol misuse.

Specific funds are made available to Alcohol Concern Wales and these are as follows:

1988-89	42,000
1989-90	49,546
1990-91	68,079

It was announced in June of this year that an additional £150,000 was available for organisations concerned with combating alcohol misuse.

Teachers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many resignations there have been from the teaching profession in each year between 1985 and 1989, inclusive, in each local education authority area; and if he will publish figures for (a) the primary sector and (b) the secondary school sector.

Sir Wyn Roberts [holding answer 28 November 1990]: The number of teachers who have moved out of teaching posts in the maintained education sector is given as follows for the years ending 31 March 1986 to 31 March 1988. Information for 1989 is not yet available, and information prior to 1986 is not readily available.

Note: Figures exclude those teachers who moved out of posts for the following reasons: death, disbarment, retirement, movement within the maintained education sector in England or Wales, or became part-time. Also, those teachers who entered and left a post within the year March 31 to March 31 are not included.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the names of members nominated by his Department to represent ethnic minority communities to serve on bodies in Wales during the past three years.

Mr. David Hunt (holding answer 27 November): Members are appointed on the basis of their personal qualities and relevant experience and not as representatives of any particular ethnic group. Candidates are not required to state their ethnic origin; consequently, such information is not recorded.

HEALTH

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what alternatives to benzodiazepine sleeping pills are currently being provided in national health service hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: The current British national formulary lists seven drugs or chemical groups which are available as alternatives to benzodiazepine hypnotics.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has that pharmaceutical companies are providing incentives to national health service doctors to continue supplying benzodiazepines to patients.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no such evidence.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department is currently doing to ensure that no new patient becomes addicted to benzodiazepines.

Mr. Dorrell: Doctors already have advice about the use of these drugs and are aware of the need to prescribe them carefully. The number of prescriptions for benzodiazepines dispensed by community pharmacists in Great Britain in 1989 was approximately 9 per cent. smaller than in 1988.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prescriptions for each individual benzodiazepine were issued by community pharmacists during 1989.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is as follows:

Benzodiazepines
Great Britain: 1989

Drug group	Prescriptions (millions)
Temazepam	7·1
Nitrazepam	4·2
Diazepam	4·1
Triazolam	2·1
Lorazepam	1·7
Chlordiazepoxide	0·8
Oxazepam	0·5
Lormetazepam	0·2
Loprazolam	0·2
Clonazepam	0·1
TOTALS	22·1

These estimates are based on a sample of prescriptions of approximately 1 in 200 in England and Wales and 1 in 100 in Scotland which were dispensed by community pharmacists.

Residential and Nursing Homes (Touting)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on touting for business on health authority property by agents for residential and nursing homes.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the replies my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales gave him on 22 November at column 193 and 30 November at column 517. I am not aware of any such problems elsewhere.

Pollen

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's review of the possible impact of vehicle gases on the potency of pollen grains.

Mr. Dorrell: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member on 17 July at column 514.

Agency Staff

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the percentage of agency nurses employed by the national health service at the present time.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest available information relates to 30 September 1989 and shows that agency nursing and midwifery staff accounted for less than 2 per cent. of the total wholetime equivalent nursing and midwifery staff employed in the national health service in England.

NHS Trusts

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which national health service trusts he intends to establish; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: National health service trusts are a central element in our plans for reforming the NHS and improving the services which it provides to patients. While remaining firmly a part of the NHS, trusts will have wide ranging and significant powers of self-determination which will enable them to deliver high quality patient care and to provide greater job satisfaction to their employees.

The trust initiative has already attracted considerable interest from those working within the NHS. Last year some 86 hospitals and other units indicated that they were considering applying to become operational on 1 April 1991. Staff from the management executive worked closely with these units while they were deciding whether to apply for trust status and during the preparation of their applications. During this period a number of units decided not to go ahead with a formal application for trust status on this occasion.

Sixty-six hospitals and other units formally applied for trust status, and regional health authorities have consulted widely on these applications. I have now considered these applications and the comments made on them during the consultation period by those consulted and others. In doing so, I applied four key criteria: that the establishment of a Trust will give clear benefits and improved quality of service to patients; that management has the skills and capacity—including strong, effective leadership, sufficient financial and personnel management expertise and adequate information systems—to run the unit effectively; that senior professional staff, especially consultants, are involved in the management of the unit; that the trust will be financially viable. As a result, I have decided to establish the following 56 trusts, to become operational on 1 April 1991.

Establishment orders for these trusts will be made forthwith and the trusts will be established later this month to run in shadow form for a period of some three months before taking up their full responsibilities on 1 April 1991.

We shall be setting the external financing limit for each trust shortly. In doing this, we shall take account both of the overall resources available and of the plans which trusts have set out. Inevitably, this will involve difficult decisions, as it will not be possible to meet all trusts' capital aspirations next year. As has been made clear in the past, our first priority will be to ensure funding for those schemes which Trusts could otherwise expect to be funded from regions' capital programmes next year had the trusts remained under health authority management.

I believe that the following eight applications have the potential to become successful trusts and hope in time they will do so.

Newcastle General Hospital
The City and Hackney Health District
Harefield Hospital
North West Hertfordshire Priority Services Unit
St. Thomas' Hospital
Bromley Priority Health Services Unit
Bromley Acute Services Unit
Mid Downs West Unit (Crawley Hospital)

However, I consider that, in view of the very significant management tasks they face it would not be right to establish them now as trusts, with the substantial responsibilities as well as benefits which trust status confers. I realise that my decision will come as a deep disappointment to them. I am writing to each of them today setting out the reasons for my decision and I hope that, if they are able to demonstrate that they have satisfactorily addressed these issues, I shall be able to establish them as trusts to come into operation in April 1992.

Following recent changes to the project management team of the potential trust, the sponsors of the proposed North Devon healthcare trust believe that it would be preferable that I defer the establishment of the trust at present. They remain committed to trust status but believe it would be sensible to give the new management team more time to establish itself and win local support. I have no doubt that the proposed trust has the potential to deliver benefits to local people, but I agree entirely that it would be sensible for me not to establish the trust at present.

The sponsors of the proposed Brighton hospitals trust have also asked that their application should be deferred. I have agreed to this request. I have no doubt that Brighton has the potential to become a successful trust in the future.

Meanwhile, we are already embarking on the process of responding to the many expressions of interest in a second wave of potential trusts to become operational on 1 April 1992. I am delighted to report that there is great interest in this, and I have today agreed that the 111 hospitals and other units listed, which have expressed interest in trust status, can proceed to work up applications to become trusts on 1 April 1992.

These expressions of interest do not commit the hospitals or other units to applying for Trust status.

The following four expressions of interest have been received from colleges of nursing.

Colleges of Nursing
Avon College of Health Studies
South West College of Health Studies
Normanby College of Health Care Studies
Portsmouth Education Services

I shall be considering further how best these colleges can achieve the flexible management arrangements they desire in the future.

I believe that the scale of the response to the trust initiative shows the very real enthusiasm of those working in the NHS to take advantage of the benefits of trust status and, over time, I expect to see trust status becoming the natural model for all units providing patient care.

Delighted as I am at the real success of the trust initiative I should emphasise that it forms only a part, albeit a very major part, of our overall programme of reform of the NHS. That programme is making steady progress. When trusts become operational, they will do so as part of a radically changed NHS, in which there is a clear separation between purchasers and providers of care and a system of contracting which will begin to achieve a closer match between resources and needs and will help to drive forward further improvements in quality and value for money. The first wave of GP fund holders will be able to exert greater influence over the care their patients receive. Medical audit will be in place across the NHS. These developments, put in place in a relatively short time, taken together, will represent an immense achievement by those working in the NHS and will enable the service as a whole to deliver significant improvements in patient care.

Hospital and Ward Closures

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list hospital and ward closures in each district in Herefordshire since 1987.

Mr. Dorrell: The following hospital in Herefordshire was approved for closure:

Year	Hospital/ Facility
1989	Old Priory

Information on ward closures is not held centrally.

Drugs

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all the illnesses for sufferers of which drugs are available free of charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: People who suffer from one or more of the following medical conditions are entitled to claim exemption from all NHS prescription charges:

A permanent fistula which requires continuous surgical dressing or an appliance.

Epilepsy for which continuous anti-convulsive therapy is essential.

A continuing physical disability which prevents the patient from leaving home without the help of another person.

Diabetes mellitus, except where treatment is by diet alone

Myxodema (hypothyroidism).

Hypoparathyroidism.

Diabetes insipidus or other forms of hypopituitarism.

Forms of hypoadrenalism (including Addison's disease for which specific substitution therapy is essential.

Myasthenia gravis.

In addition, there are extensive general exemption arrangements which are designed to protect those who are likely to have difficulty in paying charges. Anyone who is not exempt, but who needs a lot of prescriptions, is able to limit their outlay by buying a prepayment certificate ("season ticket"). As a result of these arrangements, a charge is paid on less than one in five items dispensed.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated annual cost of the free provision of drugs for patients suffering from life-threatening cancer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available.

Hospitals

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements exist for national health service hospitals to provide a casualty service at a lower level of service than a full accident and emergency unit.

Mr. Dorrell: Health authorities determine the level of accident and emergency services they consider necessary to meet the needs of their population and thereafter make suitable arrangements for such provision.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all the regulations and guidelines which influence staffing levels and related issues in national health service hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: There are no regulations or standards set centrally on staffing levels in the national health service.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Accountants' Pay

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many accountants in the Treasury received pay increases in excess of 29 per cent. in the pay settlement years 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990, taken individually.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are no instances of accountants in the Treasury receiving increases in excess of 29 per cent. in respect of any of the pay settlement years 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990.

CIVIL SERVICE

House of Commons Disqualification Act

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what arrangements are to be made to provide hon. Members with information about the amendments contained in the resolution tabled on 26 November updating schedule 1 to the House of Commons Disqualification Act.

Mr. Renton: A detailed explanatory note on the revised resolution tabled on 3 December is available from the Vote Office.

Agency Status

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list in the Official Report all the executive agencies that have been established, their parent Department, the date on which they were established and the numbers of staff employed.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Broadcasting Ownership

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is in a position to announce the supplementary ownership rules which he proposes to implement by order under schedule 2 of the Broadcasting Act 1990.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The ownership rules will contain the following provisions:

(a) it will be permissible for one body to hold a controlling interest in two regional Channel 3 licences as long as they are not both large. Of the 15 regional Channel 3 areas, we shall designate the top nine (in terms of NAR share) as large, and the bottom six as small.

(b) in relation to regional Channel 3, national Channel 3 and Channel 5 licences, where a person owns two licences (in the case of regional Channel 3) or one licence (in the case of national Channel 3 or Channel 5) he will be permitted to have a maximum of a 20 per cent. stake in one further such licence, and a maximum stake of 5 per cent. in any further licences.

(c) where a person has no controlling interest in any licence, he will nevertheless be permitted to have more than a 20 per cent. interest in two regional or one national licence, a maximum of a 20 per cent. interest in one further such licence and a maximum of a 5 per cent. interest in any further licences.

(d) national newspaper proprietors will not be permitted to have more than a 20 per cent. interest in any local radio licence. No national or local newspaper proprietor will be permitted to have more than a 20 per cent. interest in a domestic satellite service licence.

(e) no public telecommunications operator will be permitted to have a controlling interest in any Channel 3, Channel 5, national radio or domestic satellite licence.

(f) there will be a points scheme to indicate the maximum ownership permitted of local radio stations. All stations (with their associated channels) will be awarded points on the basis of their audience reach. It will be permissible to own stations which correspond to a maximum of 15 per cent. of the total number of points in the system.

I have placed a more detailed set of proposals in the Library. I hope to place an Order before the House in December.

Deportation

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women have been deported after serving sentences in British prisons for the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Figures in the form requested have been held centrally only since September 1986.

The figures in the table relate to deportations under section 3(6) of the Immigration Act 1971, where recommendation for deportation made by a court was part of a custodial sentence, and under section 3(5)(b) of that Act where deportation on conducive grounds was deemed to be appropriate following a custodial sentence.

	Section 3(6)	Section 3(5)(b)	Total
1988	52	9	61
1989	69	6	75

Prisoners (Suicides)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) suicides and (b) attempted suicides for (i) prisoners and (ii) those on remand in prison for each year for 1985 to 1989.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of deaths at their own hand of inmates at Her Majesty's prison service establishments for each year from 1985 to 1989 is shown in the table. A figure is also given for the number of incidents of self-injury in 1989 which were regarded as attempted suicide. Information about the status of inmates who attempted suicide is not readily available. Only partial information is available on the number of suicide attempts in earlier years.

Number of deaths at own hand of inmates at Her Majesty's Prison Service establishments 1985-1989

1985	19(16)	10(7)	29(23)	—
1986	14(12)	7(5)	21(17)	—
1987	[2]29(28)	17(14)	46(42)	—
1988	21(19)	16(12)	37(31)	—
1989	27(18)	21(16)	48(34)	543

[1] The figures in brackets denote number of deaths for which a verdict of suicide was returned at the coroner's inquest.
[2] Includes one inmate who was detained under the Immigration Act and who was not therefore on remand.

Electoral Records

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the legal provisions in addition to the Representation of the People Act 1983 which entitle a person to obtain access to the parliamentary ballot papers and counterfoils and the marked electoral registers, returns, declarations and other election documents in the custody of a returning officer or the Clerk of the Crown.

Mrs. Rumbold: The only statutory provisions concerning the retention of, access to and disposal of the documents used at a parliamentary election are those laid down in schedule 1 to the Representation of the People Act 1983.

Shotguns

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many semi-automatic and pump action shotguns have been certified as shotguns after being modified from section 1 firearms classification under the terms of the Firearms Act 1988, up until the latest available date or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the masters of the proof houses that, to date, approximately 47,000 adapted smooth-bore guns have been certified by the proof houses so as to enable the guns to be retained on a shot gun certificate. 30,000 of these were dealt with in Birmingham and the remainder in London.

Open Prisons (Escapes)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners convicted of drug and drug-related offences have absconded from open prisons in each of the past three years; how many were recaptured; and which open prisons were involved.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Vagrancy Act

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were (a) prosecuted and convicted in the Metropolitan and City of London police districts in the year ended December 1989 under the Vagrancy Act 1824 for (i) begging and (ii) sleeping out, (b) prosecuted and convicted in the rest of England and Wales in the same period for the same offences; and how many people at (a) and (b) above (1) were fined, (2) received custodial sentences, (3) served custodial sentences in default of payment of fines, (4) received conditional discharges and (5) received probation orders, respectively.

Mr. John Patten: The information available is given in the table. Figures are not available separately for receptions into prison service establishments in default of payment of a fine for offences of begging and sleeping out.

Anti-Semitic Incidents

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether statistics are kept on incidents of an anti-Semitic nature; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Metropolitan police maintain specific statistics on anti-semitic incidents as part of their records on all racially motivated attacks. Other police forces collect statistics on racial attacks without separate identification of the ethnicity of all victims. The Government remain committed to taking effective action against all forms of racial violence. The desecration of Jewish cemeteries is a particularly distressing example of such behaviour.

The Government and the Association of Chief Police Officers are keeping the situation under constant review, and have had meetings with the Board of Deputies of British Jews to assess the problem. Police forces are aware of the importance of effective liaison with local Jewish community groups, and Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary is monitoring the position closely.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the finances available to his Department and/or allocated by his Department to combat alcohol misuse in each of the financial years 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90, and indicate the amounts initially available in 1990-91, and any additional sums made available by his Department for this purpose since the start of the financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I will write to the hon. Member.

Football

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to make an order bringing into force section 13 of the Football Spectators Act.

Mr. John Patten: I will write to the hon. Member.

PC Blakelock (Murder)

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has completed his review of the cases of the three persons convicted of the murder of Police Constable Blakelock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have been considering very carefully a number of representations which have been made to me about the case of Mr. Mark Braithwaite, Mr. Engin Raghip and Mr. Winston Silcott. Each was convicted of murder and riot.

I would normally only consider intervening in a case if there were presented to me some new evidence or other consideration of substance which had not previously been before the courts and which might cast doubts on the safety of the conviction.

Amongst the matters submitted to me was a statement from a psychologist who had, at the request of the defence, assessed Mr. Raghip's mental condition before his trial. The psychologist now says that, in the light of subsequent tests carried out by another psychologist, he now regards the assessment which he then made of Mr. Raghip's mental condition as mistaken. He now takes the view that had he, at the time of the trial, been aware of the later findings of the other psychologist whose tests were carried out in what he regards as more appropriate circumstances than those which he himself had encountered, he would have agreed that Mr. Raghip possessed a significant degree of mental incapacity, suggestibility and compliance.

The psychologist's changed view amounts to fresh material which I think it right that the Court of Appeal should have the opportunity to consider.

Accordingly, in the exercise of my powers under section 17(1)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968, I have today referred the case of Engin Raghip to the Court of Appeal for determination in respect of conviction. Under the provisions of that section, his case now falls to be treated for all purposes as an appeal to the court by Mr. Raghip himself, and it will be for those representing Mr. Raghip to seek to raise with the Court of Appeal any matters which they feel may be of relevance to his appeal.

I have also looked very carefully at the representations made on behalf of Mr. Mark Braithwaite and Mr. Winston Silcott, but I have found no grounds on which I would be justified in taking any action to intervene in respect of their convictions. I am, however, always prepared to consider any further representations about the safety of these convictions.

Independent Programmes (Rights)

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he now proposes in the light of the conclusion of the Director General of Fair Trading that he would not be making a formal reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the subject of the acquisition by broadcasters of rights in indpendently produced programmes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Concern has been expressed about the common practice of broadcasters who require independent producers to assign their rights in programmes to them. In April 1990, the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry asked the Director General of Fair Trading to consider whether action under competition legislation would be justified.

After detailed investigation, the Director General advised that there was no justification for a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. He found that broadcasters typically take all the rights because they provide 100 per cent. funding, and thus take all the risks. Channel 4 indicated that they were always willing to contemplate contracts which conferred exploitation rights on the independent producer, with some offsetting adjustments in funding. The director general concluded, however, that in practice few independents could offer a share of costs in exchange for rights, but that this was not the fault of the broadcasters, who were not thereby abusing their dominant power.

In the light of this advice, we see no case for further investigation or for statutory intervention, either through primary legislation or through the Order to be made under section 16(5) of the Broadcasting Act 1990 which will define independent production. Intervention would have serious implications for broadcasting and competition policy, copyright law and practice, and United Kingdom trade, and the Government are not convinced that it would be beneficial. Its effects on the broadcasters and independent producers themselves in a time of change and increasing competition cannot be foreseen.

The issue is not, however, necessarily closed for ever. The market in independent productions will inevitably change as the 25 per cent. quota takes effect and new broadcasters play a greater part in the market. An investigation under competition legislation is always a possibility if abuses emerge and the criteria for investigation are met.

Rates (Non-payment)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give, broken down into the smallest district or region available, the numbers of people (a) arrested and (b) imprisoned for non-payment of (i) domestic and (ii) industrial and commercial rates in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 30 November 1990]: The only readily available information is on prisoners committed for non-payment of rates of all types. This is published annually in "Prison statistics England and Wales" (table 6.3 of the latest volume, for 1989, Cm 1221), copies of which are in the Library.

Details of the local authority area are not recorded centrally. However, the table gives details, for 1989, of the counties in which the committing courts are situated. Similar information for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for the last available year (a) the amount of toxic waste imported in total and by port and (b) the country of origin and destination of toxic waste imports by port, together with the nature of the toxic waste in each case.

Mr. Baldry: The information in respect of imports through English ports for the year to 31 March 1990 is shown in the following table.

I will write to the hon. Member about the second part of his question.

Similar information in respect of imports to Wales was given in the reply by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales on 22 November at columns 191-194.

SCOTLAND

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost to Greater Glasgow health board of the management authority's review of its acute services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Greater Glasgow health board's review of its acute services involves a wide range of the board's medical and administrative staff. It would be impossible to cost their work on the strategy separately from their other duties.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each of the last 12 months the total number of agency nursing staff employed by the Greater Glasgow health board both in absolute numbers and as a percentage of trained nurses.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available centrally.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the finances available to his Department and/or allocated by his Department to combat alcohol misuse in each of the financial years 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90 and indicate the amounts initially available in 1990-91, and any additional sums made available by his Department for this purpose since the start of the financial year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In addition to research and the general allocations made to health boards, the Scottish Home and Health Department provides grant support to the Scottish Council on Alcohol, the national voluntary organisation concerned with alcohol problems, and funds the Scottish Health Education Group. The Scottish Education Department gives grants to voluntary and other organisations under sections 9 and 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 and the Industry Department for Scotland supports local alcohol-related projects under the urban programme. In addition, the Scottish Home and Health Department and the Scottish Education Department jointly fund the alcohol studies centre at Paisley college of technology. Expenditure in the last three financial years and estimated expenditure in 1990-91 is set out in the table below. No additional allocations have been made in 1990-91 since the start of the financial year.

Funding provided by Scottish Office specifically to combat alcohol misuse

Scottish Health Education Group	213,800	205,400	276,100	340,000
Total	886,500	798,300	934,600	1,095,800

Historic Buildings

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the total Government expenditure on the upkeep, care and protection of historic buildings and monuments in Scotland in each year since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 29 November 1990]: Gross expenditure by the Scottish Development Department on the conservation and presentation of historic buildings and monuments (including the royal parks) in Scotland since 1980 was as follows:

	£ million
1980-81	4·983
1981-82	6·696
1982-83	6·850
1983-84	7·924
1984-85	8·610
1985-86	9·801
1986-87	9·681
1987-88	12·225
1988-89	14·775
1989-90	18·608

Planned gross expenditure in 1990-91 is £19·8 million.

Steel

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any representations from British Steel about its long-term plans for the quench and temper facility at Clydesdale and the finishing facility at the Imperial works.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 3 December 1990]: When my right hon. and learned Friend last met the chairman of British Steel, he told him that British Steel intended, subject to concluding satisfactory arrangements, to continue operations at the Imperial works. Imperial would be supplied with lower cost pipe from abroad, some of which would be heat treated initially at the quench and temper plant at Clydesdale.

Erskine Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take concerning finances of the Erskine bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 December 1990]: Arrangements for the financing of the bridge beyond the end of the tolling period in 1991 are under consideration. No decision has yet been taken.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to (a) end or (b) increase tolls on the Erskine bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 December 1990]: No decisions have yet been taken.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest figure for overall operating deficit on Erskine bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 December 1990]: The latest published account for 1988-89 shows an operating surplus for the year of £971,208.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to write off accumulated debt on the Erskine bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 December 1990]: Future financing arrangements for the Erskine bridge are under consideration.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest accumulated debt on the Erskine bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 December 1990]: The figure shown as the accumulated deficiency in the latest published account for 1988-89 is £84,889,183.

TRANSPORT

A20

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress made since January in implementing the decisions to improve the A20 road between Folkestone and Dover.

Mr. Chope: Construction of part of the new A20 between Folkestone and Court wood started in October. Design is continuing on the remaining part.

The compulsory purchase order for the section between Court wood and Dover was made in July. Land acquisition and rehousing of Dover district council's tenants affected by the scheme are under way.

We are on programme for completion of the whole length from Folkestone to Dover by the planned opening of the channel tunnel in mid-1993.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the fastest travelling time from (a) Chester, (b) Cardiff, (c) Newport, (d) Swansea and (e) Holyhead for (i) freight and (ii) passengers to the channel rail tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: British Rail's current estimate of the fastest travelling times for passenger trains from the destinations requested to the United Kingdom portal of the channel tunnel is as follows:

Origin	Time (hours)
Chester	4½
Cardiff	4½
Newport	4
Swansea	5½
Holyhead	5¾

These estimates may of course change between now and the opening of the tunnel in 1993.

British Rail does not have equivalent figures for freight trains, for which reliability of delivery will be more important than journey time.

A2

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress made since February in implementing the decision to dual the A2 road between Lydden and Dover.

Mr. Chope: Following the addition of the A2 Lydden (B2060)—Dover improvement scheme to the trunk road programme in February it was announced in September that preparation of the scheme would be open to consultant competition. Arrangements for this are in hand with a view to inviting competitive bids from selected consultants as soon as possible in the new year. A further announcement will be made following the appointment of the successful firm.

A1

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average volume of daily traffic using the A1 between Scotch Corner and Newcastle over the past decade; and when work to convert the A1 to a three-way carriageway will commence.

Mr. Chope: The annual average daily traffic figures show:

	1981	1990
Scotch Corner	16,350	28,900
Chester-le-Street	26,000	39,800
Tyne and Wear	40,800	64,400

The Tyne and Wear section of the A1(M) is currently three-lane carriageway. A study of the route from Scotch Corner to Tyneside was announced in "Roads for Prosperity". Consultants are yet to be appointed.

Traffic Calming

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the local authorities which (a) made inquiries following publication of traffic advisory leaflet 2/90 and (b) are spending public money on introducing speed control humps as traffic calming measures.

Mr. Chope: (a) Since the traffic advisory unit leaflet was published on 15 November, copies have been sent to all local highway authorities. Many enquiries and requests for further copies have been received but no central record of such contracts is maintained.

(b) This information is not held centrally.

Driving Tests

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the average time taken for an applicant for a driving test to remain on the waiting list in each area in Wales.

Mr. Chope: The average waiting times for L tests at Welsh driving test centres are as follows:

Centre	Average Waiting Time (Weeks)
Abergavenny	8

M66, Denton

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents have occurred at the junction of the M67 and M66 in Denton since the M66 opened; and when work will commence to improve that junction.

Mr. Chope: Since the M66 opened on 28 April 1989, there have been 16 accidents involving personal injury, only one of which was serious, and 30 involving damage only. Work on the junction improvement is programmed to start in April 1991.

Electrification, Cheshire

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the reasons for the delay in allowing Cheshire county council to borrow £800,000 for its share of the costs of the Hooton to Ellesmere Port and Chester electrification scheme.

Mr. Freeman: The total cost of this project is about £10 million spread over three years. Even if credit approvals could be made available this year, it would not make sense to do so unless the rest of the project could be financed. I am considering whether adequate resources could be made available for the scheme as a whole and hope to make an announcement shortly.

Wheel Clamping Firms (Licensing)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will now consider a system of licensing for wheel clamping firms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Warwick and Leamington (Sir D. Smith) on 22 November at column 169.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether people with Alzheimer's disease are accepted as being terminally ill when assessing income support rates for people in nursing homes.

Miss Widdecombe: The level of income support payable depends on the type of care the nursing home is providing for the claimant. The adjudication officer must be satisfied that the home is recognised by the registration authority as able to provide terminal care and that the resident is receiving such care before the higher limit can apply.

Income Support Deductions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support deductions are currently being made for (a) poll tax arrears, (b) social fund loan payments, (c) fuel payment arrears and (d) any other purposes; and if he will give a breakdown of these by social security office throughout the country.

Miss Widdecombe: The number of deductions from income support for arrears of community charge by local office was given in the reply by my hon. Friend the former Under-Secretary of State on 22 October to the hon. Member for Coventry South-East (Mr. Nellist) at column 78. The latest available information for other types of deduction is shown in the tables; for these, information by local social security office is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Table 1
Deductions from Income Support
(Social Fund repayments, accommodation, fuel and water charges)

Purpose	Number of deductions[1]	Date
Community charge arrears	9,112	31 August 1990
Social Fund loan repayments	430,000	31 October 1990
Fuel	[2]246,691	31 August 1990
Other purposes	134,671	31 August 1990

[1] The information is not routinely published. it derives from the Department's management information system and, with the exception of social fund loan repayments, is obtained from a quarterly count of deductions in action. Data on social fund loan repayments are collected monthly.

[2] Some deductions for fuel charges cover current consumption costs alone because the arrears have been cleared. It is not possible to identify only those cases with continuing arrears.

Table 2
Recovery of overpaid benefit, Voluntary Unemployment deductions

Purpose	Number of deductions
Recovery of overpaid benefit	79,485
Voluntary unemployment deductions	31,574

Note: The information derives from table 10 of the Annual Statistical Enquiry in May 1989, a copy of which is in the Library.

19-year-olds (Non-advanced Education)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what financial assistance his Department provides for 19-year-olds in full-time non-advanced education; and if he will make a statement ;

(2) what compensatory financial assistance his Department provides to families where parents are in receipt of income support and whose child is aged 19 years or older and in full-time non-advanced education;

(3) what financial assistance his Department provides to young people aged 19 years or older who are living independently and are in full-time non-advanced education.

Miss Widdecombe: These young people should apply to the local education authorities or the further education institution at which they study for financial assistance. They or their families claiming for them are not entitled to income support but for certain exceptions, including lone parent and disabled students.

DEFENCE

HMS Warspite

12. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implications of the decommissioning of HMS Warspite.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The decision to decommission HMS Warspite followed the announcement on 25 July by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, in which he envisaged, in addition to Trident, a future submarine force of around 16 boats, some three quarters of which would be nuclear-powered. This reduction in submarine force levels is to be achieved by decommissioning older, less capable boats, such as HMS Warspite, while retaining the more modern ones in service.

Military Air Crashes

13. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he proposes to take to speed up publication of reports from boards of inquiry into fatal military air crashes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The summaries of such reports are not published until all relevant investigations, including any coroners' inquests or fatal accident inquiries, are complete. Once these conditions are met, we aim for the earliest possible publication.

NATO

14. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what involvement his Department has had with NATO undercover operations which countenance terrorism.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on operational matters of this nature. But I can assure the hon. Member that neither Her Majesty's Government nor NATO would countenance any operations involving terrorism in any way.

19. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role is envisaged for NATO in conciliation arrangements in respect of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe.

Mr. Tom King: The Paris CSCE summit recommended the establishment of mechanisms for the prevention and resolution of conflicts between CSCE participants, including possible conciliation arrangements. These matters will be further discussed shortly but I think it unlikely that NATO as such would have a role in them.

Nuclear Submarines

17. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans have been made for the disposal of the Vanguard class nuclear-powered submarine fleet, subsequent to its decommissioning.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Vanguard class submarines are expected to remain in service until well into the next century.

SA80 Rifle

18. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what problems are being experienced with the use of the SA80 rifle.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: When SA80 entered service experience showed that modifications to certain components would improve the strength and reliability of the weapon whilst retaining the greater accuracy and other advantages of the SA80 over its predecessors. These have been incorporated into a modification programme which is being implemented.

Naval Procurement

20. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current naval procurement programme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We currently have nine type 23 frigates on order and expect to invite tenders for the next batch within the next few months. Tenders for additional single role minehunters are being assessed; two auxiliary oiler replenishment vessels are under construction. The Government remain committed to a four-boat Trident force and we have just placed an order for the third Vanguard class submarine. The first Upholder class conventional submarine is undergoing final acceptance trials now and will be accepted into service very shortly. The Sea Harrier capability update and EH101 (Merlin) helicopter programmes are proceeding.

Sea Systems Controllerate

21. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the proposed centralising of the sea systems controllerate with particular regard to the costing and timetable of such a move.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It remains our intention to collocate the sea systems controllerate as soon as practicable, and with a proper consideration of all the costs.

Sea King Helicopters

22. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place the order for additional search and rescue Sea King helicopters to replace the Wessex helicopters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: No decision has yet been taken on a replacement for the Wessex, which continues to make a valuable contribution to the SAR service. As part of our normal equipment planning process, we are considering the case for its replacement. I cannot, at this stage, say whether we shall need new helicopters.

The Gulf

23. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the additional costs to his departmental budget caused by the Gulf crisis.

Mr. Tom King: Revised Winter Supplementary Estimates being submitted to the House for approval include £480 million for additional costs so far identified arising from the Gulf crisis.

24. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current situation of British forces in the Gulf.

30. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the role of the British troops in the Gulf.

Mr. Tom King: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply that I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind).

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what boots are being worn by British forces serving under desert conditions in the Gulf;

(2) whether desert boots have been issued to British forces serving under desert conditions in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Normal issue combat boots are being worn by British forces in the Gulf for duty purposes, while lightweight boots have been issued for off duty wear. In addition, limited quantities of a new desert combat boot have been trialled, and are currently in production. They will be issued as supplies become available.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether British forces serving under desert conditions in the Gulf are required to purchase desert boots for their own use.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current number of fatalities involving British forces serving in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Two.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, giving such information as is available, those accidents that have occurred so far to British service personnel in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 30 November 1990]: The pilot of a Jaguar aircraft was killed when his aircraft crashed on 13 November. On 30 November a Royal Army Medical Corps corporal serving with 33 field hospital was killed in a shooting incident. There have been a number of other accidents, including one other involving the loss of an aircraft, in which service personnel have been injured, but it would not be practicable to provide a detailed list.

Territorial Army

25. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current manpower strength of the Territorial Army and Voluntary Reserve.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 30 September 1990 the strength of the Territorial Army, including the home service force, was 74,720.

Armed Services (Insurance)

26. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to ensure that members of the armed services are not disadvantaged when seeking life insurance cover or cover in relation to house purchase as a result of an international situation involving British military interests.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 23 November 1990 at column 234.

Trident

27. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects Trident to be operational.

Mr. Alan Clark: As previously announced, it remains our intention to deploy Trident into operational service in the mid-1990s.

"Options for Change"

28. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to reduce the impacts upon local economies following reductions in forces following "Options for Change".

Mr. Alan Clark: Local economic and environmental factors will be taken fully into account.

Nuclear Tests

29. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now review his policy on compensation to service personnel who are suffering health problems as a result of their involvement in British nuclear tests.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 20 November, Official Report, column 79, he will set out the number of military and scientific staff sent to the United States of America to supervise and monitor the test; and if he will indicate to which Government data on the test will be made available, and under what conditions.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice to give details of United Kingdom personnel who attend such tests. Data from the test is made available to the United States under the terms of the 1958 United States-United Kingdom agreement for mutual co-operation for defence purposes.

RAF Exercises

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the titles, functions of and aircraft types involved in the RAF-sponsored exercises (a) on Salisbury plain between 15 and 19 May, (b) in mid-Wales between 13 and 19 July and (c) in East Lothian between 17 and 21 July.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Exercise STONE WARRIOR
A combined Royal Air Force and 5 Airborne Brigade tactical exercise, on the occasion of the royal review of 5th Airborne Brigade, involving Hercules aircraft.

(b) Exercise OSEX 90
An offensive air support exercise, involving Harrier, Jaguar, A-10, Tornado and air defence aircraft.

(c) Exercise RED LANYARD 2/90
There is no record of a major Royal Air Force exercise in East Lothian between 17 and 21 July. However, Exercise Red Lanyard 2/90 was then in progress, affecting, among other areas, south west Scotland and the Borders, Red Lanyard 2/90 rehearsed 1st Battalion the Parachute Regiment in its role as the lead parachute battalion of 5th Airborne Brigade and involved Hercules aircraft.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the types of aircraft whose noise levels were measured during the noise survey at RAF West Freugh in June 1990; and if he will list the range of flying speeds and heights for which noise level data were collected, for each type of aircraft.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mr. Neubert) gave to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 10 July 1990 at column 191, which listed those aircraft involved in the survey which are common users of the United Kingdom low-flying system. Additionally, measurements were taken of noise levels from F15 and F16 aircraft which are not common users of the United Kingdom low-flying system. Further details of the survey will be published when results are available.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to extend the noise insulation grant scheme around military airfields to (a) schools, (b) hospitals and (c) old people's homes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence's noise insulation grant scheme is designed to provide a measure of relief from the worst effects of military aircraft noise for residents when in their homes. A "home" may be a residential home for the elderly or permanent living accommodation in a school or hospital. Apart from that circumstance, accommodation in schools and hospitals is not included within the scope of the scheme. However, as previously announced by my hon. Friend the then Minister for Roads and Traffic on 28 June 1989 at column 475, the possible extension of the statutory schemes (which the Ministry of Defence follows administratively) to include such accommodation is being studied by an inter-departmental group led by the Department of Transport. I understand that the group expect to submit their report in the first quarter of 1991.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what ear protection was provided to (a) Ministry of Defence personnel and (b) civilian contractor personnel operating noise measurement and tracking equipment on the ground during the military aircraft noise survey at West Freugh in June.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Appropriate hearing protection was made available to personnel involved in this survey.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the maximum values of single noise events measured during the military aircraft noise survey at West Freugh in June will be published.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No decision has yet been taken on the format in which the results of this study will be published.

Exercise Border Fox

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many helicopter low-level sorties were carried out during Exercise Border Fox in September; and how many of these took place on 16 September.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A total of 325 hours were flown by helicopters during Exercise Border Fox in September. It is not possible to give a breakdown of the proportion spent at low level; 16 September fell outside the exercise period and involved minimal flying.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of Exercise Border Fox.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The purpose of Exercise Border Fox was to practice the conduct of airmobile operations and forward observation.

Low Flying

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if pilots are permitted to exceed the normal maximum cruising speed in the United Kingdom low-flying system in order to regain their planned timing on low-flying sorties.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes, although this should seldom be necessary since sorties are generally planned at speeds below the normal maximum cruising speed.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what minimum height the Belgian Air Force aircraft which paid an exchange visit to RAF Wattisham during October were permitted to fly over the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Two hundred and fifty feet.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the low-flying exercise centred on the Spadeadam range, scheduled to take place on 1 November; what types of aircraft and which units were involved; and how many sorties took place.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The exercise centred on the Spadeadam range on 1 November was designed to enable United States Air Force aircraft based in the United Kingdom and continental Europe to undertake electronic warfare training together. Such exercises regularly take place at various bases in Europe.

The types of aircraft involved and their units were: A10s from 10th and 81st Tactical Fighter Wings (TFW); F-111s from 48th TFW; F-4Gs and F-16s from 52nd TFW; F-15s from 36th TFW; EF-111s from 42nd ECS (Electronic Combat Squadron); and EC-130s from 43rd ECS; 38 sorties were flown.

No general use of the United Kingdom low-flying system was authorised for non-UK based aircraft.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there have been any instances since 1979 in which a request from an hon. Member for low flying avoidance status to be applied to a location in his or her constituency has been granted.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if pilots are permitted to book into low-flying areas in which the actual or forecast cloudbase or visibility do not meet the minima laid down for visual low flying.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes. Authorising officers and air crew are, however, responsible for ensuring that any proposed sortie can be safely carried out in the light of the prevailing weather conditions and in accordance with low-flying regulations.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what cuts in Royal Air Force fast jet flying hours have been applied as a result of the defence spending economies announced on 31 July.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There have been no cuts in flying hours as a result of these measures.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the purpose of the fast jet low-flying activity scheduled to take place on 2 September in northern England; what types of aircraft and which units were involved; how many sorties took place on each day; and if the Spadeadam range was specially activated for this activity;

(2) what was the purpose of the fast jet low-flying activity scheduled took take place on bank holiday Monday, 27 August, in northern England and Scotland; what types of aircraft and which units were involved; how many sorties took place on each day; and if the Spadeadam range was specially activated for this activity.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Low-flying training in northern England and Scotland was exceptionally authorised on bank holiday Monday 27 August and on Sunday 2 September for air crew undertaking training connected with our current commitment in the Gulf. In the event, no such flying took place on either date.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what way the southern boundary of low flying area 13 has been altered since July; and what was the purpose of the alteration.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The southern boundary of LFA 13 has been adjusted northwards to remove an area not required for the operation of the RAF Spadeadam range.

Skyguard Radar

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any Skyguard radars were involved in the mobile threat emitter equipment deployments listed in his reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire of 31 October, Official Report, column 626.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes, in the deployment to East Lothian between 17 and 21 July 1990.

Aircraft Exercises

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if aircraft are permitted to release chaff outside Ministry of Defence-owned land in the vicinity of Spadeadam range.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes, in strictly limited quantities and subject to other restrictions imposed in range orders.

Wiley Sike Weapons Range

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what year the dropping of practice bombs on the Wiley Sike air weapons range was first authorised; and what use of the facility has been made by Royal Air Force aircraft in each year since its establishment.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The dropping of practice bombs on the Wiley Sike air weapons range was first authorised in 1983. Since then the range has been used by the RAF for this purpose as follows:

	Days
1984	9
1985	4
1986	6
1987	4
1988	6
1989	15

Fuel Jettisoning Areas

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations of the authorised fuel jettisoning areas for military aircraft in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are no such specifically authorised areas.

RAF Aircraft (Accidents)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all incidents since August 1989 in which Royal Air Force aircraft have struck objects on the ground during flight but have subsequently landed successfully, giving the date, aircraft type, location and circumstances of each case.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information requested is in the table. Occurrences involving helicopters landing or hovering in the field are omitted.

Date	Aircraft type	Location	Circumstances
22 September 1989	Tornado GR1	Near Goose Bay, Canada	Tree strike during operational low-flying training sortie
7 December 1989	Puma	Belize	Hit a single wire at 60 feet while climbing from a forward airstrip
30 January 1990	Puma	Bomoen, Norway	Hit a logging wire while climbing from a field site with an underslung load
16 August 1990	Wessex	Northern Ireland	Hit a wire with the tail wheel while climbing from a field landing site
12 October 1990	Jaguar GR1a	RAF Coltishall	Hit approach lights on landing
23 October 1990	Tornado GR1	Northern Scotland	Wire-strike on operational low-flying training sortie
26 November 1990	Tornado GR1	Southern Scotland	Wire-strike on operational low-flying training sortie

Shackleton Aircraft

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the occasions since 1985 on which Shackleton aircraft have been (a) placed on standby for search and rescue operations and (b) used during search and rescue operations;

(2) what secondary roles are performed by RAF Shackleton aircraft apart from flare-dropping for search and rescue operations.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We do not have records of the number of times Shackleton aircraft have been placed on standby for search and rescue (SAR) operations since 1985. The table lists the occasions since 1985 when Shackleton aircraft have been used for SAR operations:

Date	Mission
15 May 1986	A Shackleton aircraft provided top cover for a SAR helicopter after an aircraft ditched in the sea.
15 July 1986	A Shackleton aircraft located an officer who had ejected from an RAF Lightning seven nautical miles north of Whitby and helped direct a SAR helicopter to him.
8 October 1986	A Shackleton aircraft assisted in the search for a missing aircraft.
22-24 April 1987	Shackleton aircraft flew four missions as on-scene commander during the search for the wreckage and casualties from an RAF Buccaneer which had crashed 30 nautical miles east of Wick.
2 and 8 July 1987	On each occasion a Shackleton aircraft provided top cover for a SAR helicopter attending an incident at sea.

Date	Mission
3 October 1988	A Shackleton aircraft provided top cover for a SAR helicopter attending a medical rescue from a boat.
28 October 1988	A Shackleton aircraft assisted in the search for a body at sea.
8 November 1988	A Shackleton aircraft was used to search for the source of a distress signal beacon.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement outlining the present and future financing arrangements for Britain's share of the European fighter aircraft costs.

Mr. Alan Clark: Within the financial limit set out in the intergovernmental EFA development memorandum of understanding, funds are available for the United Kingdom's share of work undertaken in the full development phase of EFA. Financial arrangements for subsequent phases will depend on the form of arrangements put in place to cover the production of EFA.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the level of commitment to the development and purchase of the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 29 October 1990 at column 413.

Arms Control Verification

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to increase the expertise available to his Department on verification of arms control agreements following the completion of the treaty of Paris on conventional forces in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave on 6 March to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) at column 620. The joint arms control implementation group (JACIG) will become operational on 1 January 1991.

Safety Inspections

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of occasions on which the principal specialist inspector from the Health and Safety Executive has visited atomic weapons establishment sites in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Full details of the number of occasions the principal specialist inspector from the Health and Safety Executive has visited Atomic Weapons Establishment sites over the last 10 years are not available but over the last four years the following visits have been made.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

	Aldermaston	Burghfield	Foulness	Total
1987	14	6	2	22
1988	16	1	1	18
1989	27	3	1	31
1990	18	3	1	22

This is typical of previous years.

The principal specialist inspector from the Health and Safety executive does not visit Atomic Weapons Establishment Cardiff. However, the factory inspector does, and has visited on three occasions during 1989 and 1990.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the principal specialist inspector visits atomic weapons establishment sites without informing atomic weapons establishment management prior to his visit; and what is his security clearance.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Health and Safety Executive principal inspector informs the Atomic Weapons Establishment prior to his visits. He holds high security clearance which gives him access to all parts of the establishment.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish the agreement that exists between his Department and the Health and Safety Executive regarding visits by the principal specialist inspector.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. The written agreement which exists is a classified document and is not for general publication.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current staffing level of the safety division of the atomic weapons establishment; what are the civil service grades of the members of the division; and what powers they possess to alter operations within the atomic weapons establishment on the grounds of safety.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: AWE safety division is staffed by industrial, scientific, technical, supervisory and administrative grades. The division, which is headed by director safety, provides safety services and advice to operating divisions and, if necessary, by direct recourse to the chief executive. It is not our policy to reveal the exact numbers on deployment of staff at AWE.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Judges

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what target he maintains for the number and percentage of female judges there will be in the year 2000;

(2) what target he maintains for the number and percentage of black judges there will be in the year 2000;

(3) what steps he is taking to increase the number of female judges;

(4) what steps he is taking to increase the number of black judges.

The Attorney-General: Candidates for judicial appointment are considered on their merits, regardless of sex or ethnic origin. The Lord Chancellor has, however, repeatedly made clear his wish to appoint more women and members of ethnic minorities to judicial office. Steps have been taken to make this widely known, and thus to encourage more suitably qualified women and members of ethnic minorities to put themselves forward for consideration. The composition of the bench at any one time is, however, dependent on the composition of the legal profession in the age groups with the necessary experience to be suitable. At the moment, there are relatively few women and ethnic minority candidates in the legal profession in the appropriate age groups with the right experience. It is expected that the number will increase significantly over the next 10 years, and that this will result in more women judges, and judges from ethnic minorities. It is, however, impossible to predict the composition of the pool of suitably qualified candidates for judicial office, or the number of appointments needed, 10 years ahead, and it would therefore be inappropriate to set targets.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Attorney-General what percentage and number of (a) county court judges, (b) judges who sit full time in the Crown courts, (c) judges who sit in the divisional court, (d) recorders, (e) Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, (f) judges who sit in the Court of Appeal and Court of Criminal Appeal and (g) judges who sit in the High Court, are female.

The Attorney-General: The following figures are correct as at 1 December 1990. There are 10 Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, of whom none is female. There are 27 Lords Justices of Appeal, of whom one is female (3·7 per cent.). There are 83 High Court judges, of whom two are female (2·4 per cent.). There are 424 circuit judges, of whom 19 are female (4·5 per cent.). There are 762 recorders, of whom 43 are female (5·6 per cent.). In addition, the Lord Chief Justice, Master of the Rolls, president of the family division and Vice-Chancellor are all male.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Attorney-General what percentage and number of (a) county court judges, (b) judges who sit full time in the Crown courts, (c) judges who sit in the Court of Appeal and Court of Criminal Appeal, (d) judges who sit in the divisional court, (e) judges who sit in the High Court, (f) Lords of Appeal in Ordinary and (g) recorders, are black.

The Attorney-General: Records are not kept on the ethnic origin of members of the judiciary or of candidates for judicial appointments, but our understanding of the position is as follows.

There are no Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, heads of division, Lords Justices of Appeal, or High Court judges from the ethnic minorities. There are 424 circuit judges, of whom one is from an ethnic minority (0·2 per cent.). There are 762 recorders, of whom five are from ethnic minorities (0·65 per cent.).

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Associations

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to make any orders under section 48(2) of the Housing Act 1988 to amend the permissible objects of housing associations.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

North Sea

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to implement the declarations made following conferences on the protection of the North sea in Bremen 1984, London 1987 and the Hague 1990.

Mr. Baldry: Progress on implementation of measures agreed at Bremen was reported to the second North sea conference held in London in 1987 and detailed national progress reports on the implementation of second North sea conference measures were prepared by all North sea states for the Hague conference in March 1990. Copies of these reports are held in the Library.

In July this year the United Kingdom published a "Guidance Note on the Ministerial Declaration of the Third International Conference on the Protection of the North Sea" which details action planned to implement the new measures agreed at the Hague. Copies are available in the Library.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table in the Official Report based upon the information contained in annex VIII of his local government finance statement of 31 October, showing for each local authority area listed on pages 2 to 13 (a) income from the community charge for standard spending, (b) business rate income and (c) revenue support grant, in each case as a percentage of their standard spending assessment, with each local authority being listed in ascending order according to the percentage size of their revenue support grant.

Mr. Key: Revenue support grant (RSG) and business rate income are distributed to charging authorities so that if each notifiable authority spent at the level appropriate to provide a standard level of service, all charging authorities could set a charge at the community charge for standard spending of £380·41. As the cost of providing a standard level of service, measured by the standard spending assessment (SSA) varies with the demographic, social and physical characteristics of an area—the proportions of SSA met from RSG and business rates also varies. Uniquely the SSA for the City of London does not reflect the cost of providing a standard level of service.

Full details of the distribution of RSG and business rates for 1991-92 are set out in the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) approved on 18 January and the draft Revenue Support Grant Distribution (Amendment) Report (England) published on 31 October.

I have today placed in the Library a table showing for each receiving authority area in England the information requested, together with an additional column containing the percentage of standard spending assessment (SSA) met by total external support, that is, the sum of business rate income, revenue support grant, area protection grant and the inner London education grant. The SSA for a receiving authority area is calculated by summing the SSAs per adult of the receiving authority and of all notifiable authorities precepting on that receiving authority and multiplying by its relevant population.

Roofing Slates

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures for the level of production of roofing slates within the United Kingdom; what was the level five years ago; and what were the corresponding figures for the importing of roofing slates into the United Kingdom in each of those two periods.

Mr. Key: The information requested on the production and imports of roofing slates for the United Kingdom is given in the table. Exports have been added for completeness.

Tonnes

	Production	Imports	Exports
1984	22,000	14,000	2,000
1989	46,500	49,000	5,500

Leaseholders

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many leaseholders live in flats, including old houses converted to flats, in England and Wales excluding right-to-buy purchases from local authorities.

Sir George Young: The information is not available in the form requested. In 1981 the total number of leasehold households in England and Wales was 1,506,434. It is likely that the majority of these households occupied flats.

Single People (Accommodation)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many single persons, over the age of 16 years, are currently living within family units; how these persons are considered in producing projections for future housing needs; and what assessment he has made of the future requirement for single persons' accommodation.

Sir George Young [holding answer 22 November 1990]: The estimated number of single persons aged 16 or over living within family units in England in 1988 is 4·9 million, of which 1·3 million were aged 16 or 17. These figures are derived from the 1988 labour force survey housing trailer.

In estimating the future number of households my Department makes projections of the proportions of persons who will be household heads, separately by age, sex and marital status (including single). The method is described in the Department's publication "1985 based estimate of numbers of households", a copy of which is in the Library.

The Government do not make estimates of housing requirements for particular types of household.

Business in the Community

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many schemes in cities and towns have been set up or commenced under the Government's business in the community programme; if he will list the schemes giving locations and the amount of grant allocated for each scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 29 November 1990]: Business in the Community (BITC) is not a Government initiative. It is a charity funded by over 400 of the country's major businesses and grants from the Departments of the Environment (DOE), Employment (DE) and Trade and Industry (DTI). BITC encourages business men to play a part in encouraging economic regeneration aims across the country. I will write to the hon. Member with details of my Department's grants.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Private Firms (Uniforms)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what regulations he proposes to introduce to limit private firms' use of uniforms in the style of police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans, at present, to introduce such regulations. I am pleased to note that the British Standards Institution has recently issued, for public comment, a draft British standard code of practice for manned security services, which makes recommendations on the provision of uniforms by security companies.

Hazardous Chemicals (Transportation)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met local authority representatives to discuss the role of local authorities in the energency response to an accident involving the rail transportation of hazardous chemicals; if he will detail that role; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend has not had the opportunity to meet with local authority representatives to discuss this specific matter. However, Mr. Brook, the Home Office civil emergencies adviser, has had, and will continue to have, discussions with the local authorities about their response to a whole range of civil emergencies.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements exist to protect the general public from possible off-site consequences of an accident involving the rail transportation of hazardous chemicals.

Mr. John Patten: The off-site consequences arising from such an accident are dealt with by the emergency services in consultation with the local authority and sources of specialist advice on chemical toxicity.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives he has taken in respect of research into alcohol misuse and the social effects of alcohol misuse in England; and how much money he has made available for this purpose in the current financial year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During the past three years the Home Office has commissioned a survey of drinking in England and Wales, carried out research into drinking and disorder in non-metropolitan areas, evaluated the effects of experimental byelaws to control public drinking in the central parts of various towns and cities and commissioned a preliminary study of the role economic models may play in understanding the links between alcohol and crime. The cost of work falling in this financial year was about £15,000.

Building Works

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish tables showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c) the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information requested is not available centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Details of remuneration at 1989 rates for appointees to Home Office public bodies are contained in the publication "Public Bodies", a copy of which is in the Library.

Police Inspectorate

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish reports by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary on its inspections of police forces.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [pursuant to my noble Friend's reply, 23 March 1990, c. 794]: All reports of Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary inspections are now published; the Derbyshire report will be published tomorrow and copies will then be placed in the Library.

The report conveys the professional policing judgment of the inspectorate; it offers a worrying catalogue of Derbyshire county council's policies and procedures which, in the view of the inspectorate, hinder the commendable efforts of the police force to provide the best standards of policing.

No bids for extra police manpower were made for 1988 and 1989: my predecessor approved an additional 19 posts for 1990—on which 51 per cent. police grant would have been paid—but the council was unwilling to meet its share of the funding and the posts were not taken up; civilian posts are left vacant or take six months to fill; buildings are in a poor state and the police committee did not respond to a 1988 Home Office invitation to submit proposals for a building plan; budgetary processes are exceptionally cumbersome, and little control is devolved to the chief constable.

Resources for policing are allocated on the same basis throughout England and Wales. But no other police authority has merited such informed professional criticism. The issues identified in the report are the consequences of the policies of the Derbyshire authorities; I shall be watching very closely to see what action they take to make substantial improvements in their performance.

TRANSPORT

Train Passengers (Falls)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider establishing an independent inquiry to look into the circumstances surrounding the deaths of passengers falling from trains.

Mr. McLoughlin: Accidents involving deaths are fully investigated by railway operators and the appropriate coroner. The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate would investigate as a matter of course if there were any evidence that accepted standards of safety had not been maintained.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many incidents of passengers falling from moving trains there were in each of the last five years; how many died from the fall; and how many were seriously injured.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is as follows:

Year	Fatal	Major Injury	Minor Injury	Total
1985	16	8	42	66
1986	12	15	34	61
1987	26	16	28	70
1988	19	13	32	64
1989	19	16	12	47

Empty Houses

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many houses his Department owns; how many are empty; and how many are along routes of proposed road building schemes.

Mr. Chope: On 1 October 1990, the total number of dwellings owned by the Department of Transport was 2,370. Of these 2,339 have been acquired in connection with road schemes and 31 are used by the coastguard services. A total of 498 are empty.

Aviation Fuel (Transport)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of (a) the amount, (b) the type and (c) the frequency of the transportation of loads of aviation fuel from the Isle of Grain through London to Stansted airport.

Mr. McLoughlin: This is a commercial and operational matter for British Rail.

Administrative Costs

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the administrative costs of his Department rose by more or less than the retail prices index in the last financial year.

Mr. McLoughlin: Gross running costs expenditure on Department of Transport administration was 9·3 per cent. higher in 1989-90 than in 1988-89. During the same period the retail prices index rose by 7·8 per cent.

Hazardous Chemicals (Transportation)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements have been agreed concerning rail transportation of hazardous chemicals through the channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No arrangements have yet been agreed. It is for Eurotunnel to put forward proposals for the movement of dangerous goods. The proposals will be considered by the Channel Tunnel Intergovernmental Commission which is advised on safety matters by the independent binational safety authority.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will set out the regulatory framework that exists to cover the rail transportation of hazardous chemicals;

(2) what regulatory framework exists to cover the possible health and safety implications of the rail transportation of hazardous chemicals; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will review the regulations and their enforcement controlling the containment of chemicals in transit in the light of the Isle of Grain derailment on 28 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Dangerous substances are carried by rail in accordance with the British Railways Board's "List of Dangerous Goods and Conditions of Acceptance by Rail on Freight Services and Parcels Service" (BR 22426). These are based on the United Nations' "Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods".

Responsibility for the safety of staff and the public rests primarily with the railway operator. Her Majesty's railway inspectorate is responsible for enforcement of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 on the railways. The inspectorate transferred to the Health and Safety Executive on 1 December.

I am considering what further action is needed to ensure that dangerous substances safety rules on our railways and those applying internationally are regularly updated and appropriately aligned.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he has taken concerning (a) the derailment of a train carrying chemicals at Stratford, east London, on 21 November, identifying the chemicals being transported and (b) the derailment of a train near the Isle of Grain refinery on 28 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: An inspecting officer of the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate (RI) visited the scene of the accident on the Isle of Grain on the morning of 28 November. British Rail will be conducting its own inquiries into both the Stratford and Isle of Grain accidents and will send a copy of its findings in due course to RI, which will then decide whether any further action is necessary. I understand from BR that the train at Stratford included wagons carrying sodium hydroxide solids and diphenyl methane—4, 4—diifocyanate, but that these particular wagons were not derailed.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the inventory his Department maintains on those chemicals currently transported by rail in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department does not have such an inventory, but I understand that British Rail has a list of dangerous substances which can be transported by rail.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of railway accidents involving chemicals being transported in each of the years 1980 to 1990 and for each of the categories (a) corrosive, (b) poisonous, (c) volatile and (d) explosive.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that the railway inspectorate does not have information in the form requested.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what role his Department takes in planning for, and responding to, possible accidents involving the rail transportation of hazardous chemicals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for British Rail, the emergency services and local authorities.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what hazard assessment and emergency planning arrangements exist for accidents involving the rail transportation of hazardous chemicals; what body is responsible for this work; and if possible off-site consequences of an accident are taken into account in the assessment and planning arrangements.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail, the emergency services and local authorities, which are responsible for the off-site consequences of an accident, liaise closely in assessing hazards and developing arrangements to deal with major railway accidents, including those involving hazardous chemicals. As part of these arrangements, joint exercises are held frequently.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what procedure exists to provide emergency services attending an accident involving the rail transportation of chemicals with information concerning the identity and possible hazard of these substances; and how early during an emergency response such information is available to the emergency services.

Mr. Freeman: Every railway wagon carrying a dangerous substance should be identified by a HAZCHEM label, and there are also arrangements for British Rail regional control offices to provide the emergency services with lists of wagons and contents. Further advice is available from the consignor or the Chemical Industries Association's CHEMSAFE arrangements. I understand that response times are usually very quick.

Building Works

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will publish tables showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c) the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mr. McLoughlin: Fees and salaries for the majority of appointments made by my right hon. and Friend are contained in the annual publication "Public Bodies" published by HMSO, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. The appointments which are not listed in this document are:

Acting conservator of the River Mersey (£7,667 per annum),

Delegate to the Central Rhine Commission (unpaid),

Chairman and members of the honorary medical advisory panel on driving and diabetes (unpaid),

Chairman and members of the honorary medical advisory panel for driving and disorders of the nervous system (unpaid),

Chairman and members of the honorary medical advisory panel on driving and cardiovascular disorders (unpaid).

My right hon. and learned Friend also appoints some part-time members to ports authorities, but their remuneration is a matter for the individual authority concerned.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects the passenger trains for services through the channel tunnel from destinations from north of London to be delivered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: British Rail last December announced plans to operate daytime international rail services connecting stations on the east and west coast main lines directly with Paris and Brussels. These plans remain unchanged. However the high-speed trains are even more complex than those which will operate between London, Paris and Brussels and will require a substantial period of safety and operational testing. The manufacturers have not yet been able to quote a firm price and delivery date. As a result, through passenger services are unlikely to be available until 1994. In the light of this I have indicated to British Rail the importance I attach to improving the journeys of passengers from north of London in the period immediately after the tunnel opens. I understand it is now planning to operate some inter-city services from the north into Waterloo, so avoiding the need for passengers to cross London. Tenders for rolling stock for night trains through the tunnel are likely to be invited shortly.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about ministerial responsibilities in his Department.

Mr. Brooke: I announced yesterday the following ministerial responsibilities.

The right hon. the Lord Belstead, Her Majesty's Paymaster General and deputy to the Secretary of State, is responsible for law and order and the Department of Education. He is spokesman on all Northern Ireland matters in the House of Lords.

Dr. Brian Mawhinney MP, Minister of State, is responsible for the Department of Finance and Personnel, the central community relations unit, political affairs division and the information services. He is also the spokesman in the House of Commons on law and order and education matters.

Mr. Richard Needham MP, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, is responsible for the Department of Economic Development, the Industrial Development Board, and the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Jeremy Hanley MP, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, is responsible for the Department of Health and Social Services and the Department of Agriculture. As one of the four United Kingdom Ministers responsible for agriculture I will maintain my interest in that area.

I will continue to have overall responsibility for the work of the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Soviet Union

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is currently being provided to the Soviet Union; what form it takes; and if there are any plans for it to be stepped up.

Mrs. Chalker: We have announced a know-how fund of £20 million for the Soviet Union. Its aim will be to transfer British skills and expertise in areas essential to economic reform, particularly food distribution, energy, small business formation and financial services. Wider financial assistance will be a matter for multilateral action in the light of the EC and IMF studies of the Soviet economy now under way.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Trade Barriers

14. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on progress by the European Community on removing barriers to trade to permit a satisfactory outcome to the Uruguay round.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is this week leading the United Kingdom delegation to the ministerial meeting in Brussels called to conclude the Uruguay round of trade negotiations. It is in everyone's interest, including the European Community, that the round should succeed. For this to happen, all concerned will need to show flexibility. But it is essential to preserve and strengthen the multilateral trading system. We are continuing to work with our Community partners in Brussels this week to bring this about.

British Exporters

15. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department intends to bring forward any new proposals to help British exporters.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department is seeking, through the current GATT negotiations, to liberalise the world trading environment. We are also leading the way in implementing the directives necessary for creating the single European market.

34. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to help British exporters.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department, together with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, provides a wide range of services for British exporters. We are continually monitoring our schemes to ensure they are meeting the needs of business.

Textiles and Clothing

17. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of trade in textiles and clothing.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend is seeking to improve market access by reducing tariff and trade barriers and to strengthen the rules and disciplines of GATT so as to provide fairer conditions for trade in textiles and clothing.

Defence Industry

18. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has had from industry about the future of the United Kingdom defence industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: My Department is in contact with many defence companies about a wide range of matters concerning the defence industry.

Telecommunications

19. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the telecommunications duopoly.

Mr. Redwood: The Government published a consultative document entitled "Competition and Choice: Telecommunications Policy for the 1990s" on 13 November. By that time, my Department had received over 40 informal submissions regarding the telecommunications duopoly. I have now received a handful of responses to the proposals in the document. The deadline for comments is 14 January 1991.

25. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with the Director General of Oftel regarding developments in value added telephone services.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently discussed the full range of telephone services with the Director General of Oftel in the context of the telecommunications duopoly review.

Steel Imports

20. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the current level of steel imports.

Mr. Sainsbury: The latest available figures indicate that imports of steel for the 10 months to the end of October stand at 3·6 million tonnes. This represents a fall of 5·5 per cent. compared with the same period last year.

Post Office (Letters)

22. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the Post Office letter monopoly.

Mr. Leigh: The Post Office's letter monopoly is a privilege, not a right. While we keep the options on the letter monopoly under review, we have no present plans to end it, although in the event of a cessation or serious disruption to the letter service we would consider suspending it. The Government and the Post Office remain fully committed to the existence of a national letter service available to everyone, including those in rural areas, at a reasonable and uniform tariff.

Companies and Financial Services Acts

23. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had about the prosecution of offences under the Companies and Financial Services Acts with the regulatory authorities.

Mr. Redwood: My officials are in regular touch with the regulatory authorities; the subjects discussed include the prosecution of offences.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

24. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to expand the role of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: Through the ECGD, United Kingdom exporters have access to a range and quality of credit insurance and export finance facilities which are among the best available in the major exporting countries. My aim will be to ensure that ECGD continues to respond flexibly to its customers' changing needs.

Iraq (Trade Mission)

26. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the dates and details of the last trade mission to Iraq that was sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: The last outward mission to Iraq sponsored by my Department took place from 22-28 June 1990. It was organised by the Nottingham chamber of commerce and 13 United Kingdom firms were represented.

The City

27. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received any representations from the City of London corporation regarding the future development of the City.

Mr. Redwood: I have received no such representations from the City of London corporation, although I am aware of its decision to mount a study. I myself hold seminars with City practitioners to discuss the future of the financial sector.

Debt Advice

28. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will consider increasing the funding of debt advice services as a resource for households in debt.

Mr. Leigh: My Department does not specifically fund debt advice services, and I have no plans to do so. However, a large proportion of debt advice is provided by local citizens advice bureaux, as part of their general advisory work. Local bureaux receive most of their funding from local authorities, but my Department funds the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and Citizens Advice Scotland, which provide support services for local bureaux. Total DTI grant in aid to NACAB and CAS will be more than £11 million in 1990-91.

Project Assistance

29. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether his Department proposes to make any changes in its scheme for assistance for exceptional projects.

Mr. Leigh: I have no plans to alter the criteria for supporting applications for assistance towards exceptional projects.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

30. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has had concerning progress at the GATT talks.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend and I have had numerous representations on the Uruguay round of GATT negotiations, from a wide variety of sources, including industry, farmers, consumers and representatives of other Governments. This House also had a full debate on the Uruguay round on 23 November.

Textile Manufacturers

31. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in the GATT talks to gain access to new overseas markets by the United Kingdom textile manufacturers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The GATT negotiations are continuing in Brussels this week. It is a high priority for the Government to reduce barriers to Community textiles exports in overseas markets. Some countries, such as Canada, South Africa and Thailand, have offered to reduce their textiles tariffs. The Community is pressing all participants to improve their offers on textiles as part of the overall market access negotiations.

Solvent-based Products

32. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to strengthen the provisions of the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act to restrict the sale of solvent-based products to minors.

Mr. Leigh: I have no plans to amend the provisions of the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act.

Single European Market

33. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of those measures laid down for the creation of the single European market still have to be agreed between the member states of the Community.

Mr. Sainsbury: Of the 282 measures specified for the creation of the single European market in the Commission's 1985 White Paper, 190 have been agreed and 92 still remain to be agreed.

Postal Services

35. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to meet the chairman of the Post Office to discuss the quality of postal services.

Mr. Leigh: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets the chairman of the Post Office, Sir Bryan Nicholson, regularly to discuss various matters of mutual interest and concern.

Scottish TUC

36. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will next meet the Scottish Trades Union Congress to discuss the state of Scotland's industries.

Mr. Leigh: I have no plans to meet the Scottish Trades Union Congress.

Consumer Affairs

37. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of local authority trading standards officers to discuss consumer matters.

Mr. Leigh: My right hon. Friend has not had any meetings with representatives of local authority trading standards officers. However, officials have frequent meetings with them and I have accepted an invitation to meet representatives of the Institute of Trading Standards Administration early next year.

Glass Industry

38. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to next meet his EC Trade Minister colleagues to discuss the glass industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend keeps in close contact with his EC ministerial colleagues but he has no plans at present to discuss the glass industry.

Retail Goods

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further measures his Department is taking to improve the safety of retail goods.

Mr. Leigh: The safety of retail goods will continue to be a high priority for my Department. The Consumer Protection Act 1987 makes it a criminal offence to supply any consumer product that is not reasonably safe. This is supported by specific regulations, where necessary, and by a range of enforcement powers that enable action to be taken effectively and swiftly against unsafe consumer goods. I see no justification for further legislation in this area.

Company Records

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in which department requests which arise at Companies house satellite offices for individual company records on microfiche are dealt with.

Mr. Redwood: The majority of search requests made in the satellite offices are satisfied by Companies house in London.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry where microfiche records paid for at a Companies house satellite office to be sent to the inquirer's office or home are posted.

Mr. Redwood: Microfiche records requested and paid for in Companies house's satellite offices are not posted on to customers' offices or homes.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what system is used to transport company microfiche requested at satellite offices from Cardiff to those offices; and if this system is more expensive or cheaper to operate than if the same packets were sent to the satellites by Royal Mail.

Mr. Redwood: The system used to transport search requests to the satellite offices is operated by Britdoc Ltd. trading as British Document Exchange. This system is 50 per cent. cheaper than first-class post per item and 33 per cent. cheaper than second-class post.

EC Financial Directives

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in negotiations on the terms of the capital adequacy directive; and what issues remain to be determined.

Mr. Redwood: The Commission proposal for a directive to establish minimum capital adequacy requirements for investment firms and credit institutions conducting investment business was submitted to the Council in June. Negotiations are now under way in the Council working group. The directive as drafted represented a major improvement on earlier, unpublished drafts but it is clear that a number of member states favour higher minimum initial capital requirements. The Government's immediate concerns are to resist any increase in these initial requirements, to agree a satisfactory treatment of independent financial intermediaries, and to agree a satisfactory definition of those illiquid assets which must be deducted from the capital of investment firms. The Government's overall objective remains to negotiate a directive which genuinely relates capital requirements for individual firms to the risks to which those firms are exposed, and maintains the international competitiveness of the European Community.

Iraq (Supergun)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will now make it his practice to answer any questions relating to the export of militarily sensitive supergun parts to Iraq.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 27 November 1990]: Where I can add to the information provided by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade on Second Reading of the Import and Export Control Bill, without helping the Government of Iraq (or any other would-be evader of export controls), I will answer questions which fall within my Department's area of responsibility.

Auditing Practices Committee

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date his representative on the Auditing Practices Committee was informed of the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies' review of the Auditing Practices Committee.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 November 1990]: In mid-July.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Coinage

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in respect of the size of the new 5p piece.

Mr. Maples: A number of letters have been received.

Business Investment

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of business investment in 1991; and what is the level of business investment in (a) France, (b) Italy and (c) Germany, respectively.

Mr. Maples: In the autumn statement, business investment in the United Kingdom in 1991 was forecast to be £56 billion at 1985 prices.

The latest estimates of private non-residential investment—the standardised international definition which is closest to business investment—for the United Kingdom, France, Germany and Italy are for 1989. They are set out in the table as a share of GDP. The United Kingdom devoted a larger share of its GDP to private non-residential investment than the other three countries.

Private non-residential investment as a share of GDP, 1989

	Share of GDP
United Kingdom	13·9
France	12·6
Germany	12·8
Italy	[1]12·4

[1] 1988; 1989 not available.

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The annual salary and fixed fee cost of appointments made by the Treasury is about £1 million a year. There are further appointments that pay a daily fee depending on involvement and most appointments pay travel and subsistence expenses. Details of this expenditure are not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

ENERGY

Piper Alpha Report

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the cost of technical and hardware measures outlined in the interim report of the Piper Alpha disaster and the Cullen report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The principal recommendations of Lord Cullen's report deal with broad principles of safety management rather than detailed technical or hardware measures. The cost of any measures required or thought desirable in the light of the application of these principles seems likely to vary from case to case, and it is not possible at this stage to make any overall estimate of additional costs attributable to the implementation of these recommendations.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the percentage of the cost of the technical and hardware measures outlined in the interim report of the Piper Alpha disaster and the Cullen report which will be met (a) by the oil companies and (b) by the Exchequer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The extent to which the future cost of any such measures would be borne by the Exchequer would depend on a number of factors including the tax position at the relevant time of the oil or gas field, and of the company, in question.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what provision he has made to ensure information concerning the privatisation of the electricity industry has been made available on tape and in Braille to assist blind people.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The production of offer for sale documents on tape or in Braille was ruled out on the grounds of excessive cost. Blind people do, however, have the option to telephone the share information office, which is able to answer a comprehensive range of simple questions.

Gas Leaks

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress he has made towards establishing reliable estimates of gas leakage from the low-pressure distribution system; whether his Department remains dependent on British Gas for such estimates; and what is the current best estimate for such leakage.

Mr. Moynihan: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Member for City of Chester (Mr. Morrison) gave on 23 April 1990, at column 96. The Department of the Environment (DoE) has primary responsibility for emissions inventories and currently uses an estimate of 1 per cent. for methane loss in the natural gas distribution system.

Work is being undertaken by DoE, British Gas and others better to characterise all types of methane emission. This will be incorporated in the national estimates of total methane emissions in due course.

Building Works

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will publish tables showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c) the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Wakeham: The information in respect of the Department of Energy for the financial years 1986-87 to 1990-91 is:

	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91 (forecast)
Number of new buildings[1]	—	—	—	—	—
Amount spent on new buildings[1]	—	—	—	—	—
Amount spent on repairs and maintenance[2]	£189,247	£71,704	£83,764	£231,542	£170,000
Amount spent on building renovation[1]	—	—	—	—	—

[1] Expenditure on the Department's new headquarters building over the period 1987-88—1989-90 was borne on the Property Services Agency's Vote.

[2] Expenditure on minor new works and maintenance within the Department's delegated responsibility under the Property Repayment Scheme rules.

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer the hon. Member to the publication "Public Bodies" produced by the Cabinet Office, the latest edition of which will be published by HMSO later this month. The publication includes all appointments to bodies for which my Department is responsible except for the Director General of Gas Supply whose salary is in the range £53,420 to £63,390.

PRIME MINISTER

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Prime Minister if he has any intention of setting up an inquiry into teachers' pay; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Bill currently before the House sets up new machinery under which the local authority employers and the teacher unions will be able to negotiate teachers' pay. The Government have undertaken not normally to intervene on cost grounds if the overall cost of recommendations resulting from those negotiations falls within the inter-quartile range of private sector settlements for non-manual employees.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Antarctica

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the Antarctic minerals convention.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We believe that the convention on the regulation of Antarctic mineral resource activities (CRAMRA) contains all necessary environmental safeguards, and that it offers the best way to resolve the minerals issue and protect the Antarctic environment. However, as we have always made clear, we are prepared to discuss all proposals.

Administrative Costs

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the administrative costs of his Department rose by more or less than the retail prices index in the last financial year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Gross running costs expenditure on Foreign and Commonwealth Office diplomatic wing administration was 9·86 per cent. higher in 1989-90 than in the previous year; and for the aid wing it was 9·56 per cent. higher. During the same period the retail prices index increased by 7·8 per cent.

Purchasing

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the purchasing policy of his Department.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This Department is bound by the Government's policy that purchasers should base all procurement of goods and services on value for money, including quality (or fitness for purpose) and delivery against price. In accordance with that policy, goods and services are acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Under EC rules, and GATT (Government procurement agreement (GPA)) where appropriate, this Department is obliged to award relevant contracts in accordance with prescribed procedures aimed at avoiding discrimination on grounds of nationality.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what were his Department's (a) best and (b) worst purchases made in the current month as measured against the Government's supply index;

(2) what were the 10 worst purchases made by his Department in the month of October as measured against the Government's supply index.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office does not at present subscribe to the Government supply index run by PI Ltd.

Building Works

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will publish tables showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c) the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the latest issue of "Public Bodies", a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library, which contains all the information he requires.

Biological Diversity

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to the proposed UNEP biological diversification convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

The Government fully support proposals for the elaboration of a global convention on conserving biological diversity. The United Kingdom has extensive and internationally respected scientific and technical expertise in this area and has taken a leading role in a series of preparatory meetings organised by the United Nations Environmental Programme. Formal negotiations are planned to begin in February 1991, with the aim of reaching agreement in time for the UN conference on environment and development which will be held in Brazil in June 1992.

HEALTH

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is currently being carried out within the national health service into improved methods of withdrawing from benzodiazepines.

Mr. Dorrell: Professor Malcolm Lader and his team at the Institute of Psychiatry in London provide a service to NHS patients who wish to withdraw from benzodiazepines. The service offers both psychological and pharmacological methods of treatment and aims to evaluate the effectiveness of a range of approaches to this form of drug dependency.

Research into various aspects of dependency on benzodiazepines has been carried out in Yorkshire, West Midlands and South East Thames regions.

Military Medical Requirements

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the financial cost to the national health service of the cutback in military medical facilities since 1975.

Mr. Dorrell: Apart from the services provided to the dependants of military personnel, the treatment which military hospitals provide to civilians is undertaken to ensure adequate training and professional opportunities for the staff of such hospitals. It is not taken into account when determining the funding requirements of the national health service, or when allocating funds to regional health authorities.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of measures presently being undertaken in the national health service as a result of a possible military conflict in the Gulf.

Mr. Dorrell: The national health service has at all times the function of ensuring that it is in a position to respond effectively to a major emergency. Contingency plans are reviewed regularly in the light of prevailing circumstances. The cost of maintaining this function is not held centrally.

North Nottinghamshire Health Authority

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date the consultation period for proposals for the creation of a new North Nottinghamshire health authority began; when it ended; and on what date the consultation document was supplied to the hon. Members for the constituencies concerned.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is considering Trent regional health authority's proposal to proceed to formal public consultation. No document has yet been issued.

Benzene

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Government's health advisers have now examined the evidence on exposure of the public to benzene in the atmosphere and its possible implications for public health; what conclusions have been reached; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: At a preliminary discussion recently the Department of Health's independent committee on carcinogenicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment (COC) concluded that benzene is a human carcinogen for which it is prudent to assume no safe level of exposure. This accords with the view of the International Agency for Research on Cancer and is based on evidence from heavily exposed occupational groups. Exposure of the general population from benzene in the environment, food and drink is at an extremely low level. The committee is now considering information on exposure levels including occupational exposures in order better to assess the risk to public health. Meanwhile the Department advises that exposure should be reduced as low as reasonably achievable.

Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will meet voluntary organisations to discuss the implementation of sections 1 and 2 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986;

(2) when he last met voluntary organisations to discuss implementation of sections 1 to 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986;

(3) when he next expects to meet voluntary organisations to discuss implementation of section 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986;

(4) when he last met local authority associations on sections 1 to 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement on the meeting.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I met representatives of the consortium of voluntary organisations, "Act Now", on 5 June, with the right hon. Member and other members of the all-party disablement group. I have no current plans for further meetings. Decisions as to further action on sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Act cannot be taken until our consultations with the local authority associations are complete. Officials last met the associations on 30 October.

Waiting Lists, Herefordshire

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the latest available figures for (a) urgent and (b) non-urgent hospital waiting lists for each district in Herefordshire.

Mr. Dorrell: At March 1990 there were 3,579 people on hospital in-patient waiting lists in Herefordshire district health authority compared with 3,648 at March 1989, a reduction of 2 per cent. Waiting list data have not been collected by urgency of condition since 1987.

NHS Reform (Leaflet)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will indicate the cost of the preparation and distribution of the leaflet "The National Health Service Reforms and You".

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Minister for Health gave the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 5 July at column 675.

Custard Tarts

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of food poisoning have been notified to his Department as a result of the consumption of custard tarts.

Mr. Dorrell: None specifically related to custard tarts. The public do not, however, always report foodborne illnesses to their doctor.

Building Works

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will publish tables showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c)

the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department of Health occupies buildings on the common user estate provided and administered by the Department of the Environment. Identifiable totals of the Department of Health's expenditure are available only from 1 April 1989 following this Department's separation from the Department of Social Security. In the financial year 1989-90 the Department of Health spent £2·292 million on new works not exceeding £150,000 each.

Details of the combined Department of Health and Department of Social Security major building projects are published each year with the supply estimates and details are in the Library.

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Transplant Service

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has decided on the arrangements which are to be made to set up the United Kingdom transplant service as a special health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: The report prepared by Dr. N. J. B. Evans has been considered and Ministers have decided, in general, to accept its recommendations. Regulations will be laid shortly to set up the authority. Dr. Evans will be appointed as its chairman. A copy of his report has been placed in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

State Opening of Parliament

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will itemise, by Department, the cost of the current year's state opening of Parliament.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

The estimated cost to the Parliamentary Works Office is £45,500.

Workplace Nursery

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Lord President of the Council what progress has been made on the feasibility study regarding a workplace nursery in the House; and if he has yet consulted the staff unions regarding carrying out the study and establishment of the nursery.

Mr. MacGregor: It is understood that the feasibility study by the Administration Department on the provision of child care facilities has been completed and is to be considered by the Services Committee at its next meeting. Copies of the study have already been made available to the trade union side of the House of Commons Whitley Committee, and there will be a further consultation with it and with other relevant staff organisations once the Services Committee has responded.

House of Commons (Reform)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will bring forward proposals to reform the workings of the House of Commons.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 3 December 1990]: I am always ready and willing to consider ideas for improvement. I shall, of course, be replying to the Procedure Committee on Select Committees.

THE ARTS

Building Works

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will publish tables showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c) the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Renton: Responsibility for the repairs and maintenance of the two properties occupied by my Department rests with the Property Services Agency (PSA). The payments made to it in respect of these works are given in the table.

1987-88	24,525
1988-89	36,333
1990-91	52,983

Prior to 1 April 1988, responsibility for the building and maintenance programmes of the national museums and galleries that my Department sponsors and of the British library also rested with the PSA. Expenditure incurred by the PSA, but which was included in the central Government arts programme, was £34·5 million in 1986-87 and £34·0 million in 1987-88 in respect of the national museums and galleries, and £11·2 million and £21·8 million, respectively, for the British library.

From 1 April 1988, such costs have become the responsibility of the individual institutions, with that of the new British library building project at St. Pancras the responsibility of my Department.

The grant in aid provisions for the national museums and galleries building and maintenance programmes are:

1988-89	1989-90	1990-91

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the level of repairs and maintenance needs in (a) theatres, (b) museums and (c) libraries.

Mr. Renton: I am setting in hand a new initiative to review and assess rigorously the building renovation needs of the national museums and galleries which I sponsor. This review, which will be undertaken by professional multidiscipline building consultants, will entail a detailed study of a variety of building conditions and other technical surveys. These will be compared against requirements already identified in museums buildings and the need for further technical studies identified if required. The review should be completed by summer 1991. The results will inform my decisions in carrying forward the Government's policy of bringing about the renovation of these important and historic buildings by the end of the decade; I am at present providing £189 million over the next three years towards these building and maintenance needs.

I understand that the Theatres Trust is carrying out a small study to establish whether a systematic examination of the national state of theatres could be undertaken at reasonable cost. It is for other relevant funding bodies, including local authorities, to determine the needs for the buildings within their areas of responsibility.

Funding Requirements

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what he estimates is needed by (a) the Arts Council, (b) the Museums and Galleries Commission, (c) the Crafts Council, (d) the British Film Institute and (e) the British library if their 1991-92 budgets are (i) to stand still in relation to inflation, (ii) return in real terms, to levels of (1) 1986-87 and (2) 1979-80 in cash terms and in percentage terms.

Mr. Renton: The future expenditure programme of the Office of Arts and Libraries and the particular provisions for the institutions it supports are defined in cash terms.

In comparison with 1986-87 and 1979-80, the 1991-92 expenditure programme will be higher in real terms by £86 million (18 per cent.) and £199 million (55 per cent.) respectively. No additional funding is needed, therefore.

Additional details for each of the institutions listed could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mr. Renton: In general, those appointed by my Department to the institutions and committees it sponsors and supports do not receive fees or remuneration. They are normally reimbursed for travel and other expenditures which they incur as part of their duties, but detailed information on such reimbursements could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

There is an exception; part-time members of the British library board are remunerated for their services. The annual cost to the British library is currently £70,000.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

GCSE Examinations

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of students entered for GCSE examinations in the years 1988 to 1990 were from maintained further education institutions.

Mr. Eggar: In summer 1988, candidates from further education institutions accounted for about 4·4 per cent. of GCSE entries. In 1989, the corresponding figure was about 4·5 per cent. The figures for 1990 are not yet available.

Purchasing

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science is he will make a statement about the purchasing policy of his Department.

Mr. Fallon: The Department is bound by the Government's policy that purchasers should base all procurement of goods and services on value for money, including quality (or fitness for purpose) and delivery against price. In accordance with that policy, goods and services are purchased by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Under EC rules, and the GATT Government procurement agreement (GPA) where appropriate, the Department is obliged to award relevant contracts in accordance with prescribed procedures aimed at avoiding discriminiation on grounds of nationality.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what were his Department's (a) best and (b) worst purchases made in the current month as measured against the Government's supply index;

(2) what were the 10 worst purchases made by his Department in the month of October as measured against the Government's supply index.

Mr. Fallon: This Department does not subscribe to the Government supply index because the items currently covered by the index do not form a significant part of our expenditure and it has not therefore been economically viable to join the system. It follows that we are not privy to the information which would enable comparisons to be made.

Administrative Costs

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the administrative costs of his Department rose by more or less than the retail prices index in the last financial year.

Mr. Eggar: Gross running costs expenditure on DES administration was 8·7 per cent. higher in 1989-90 than in the previous year. During the same period the retail prices index increased by 7·8 per cent.

Research Councils

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what advice he has received in the current year from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on the level of science expenditure from public funds; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish the advice given to him by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils for the current year's public expenditure survey.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Havant (Sir I. Lloyd) on 19 November 1990 at column 30.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the chairmen of the Agricultural and Food Research Council, the Medical Research Council and the Science and Engineering Research Council to discuss the levels of their budgets; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend and I from time to time meet the chairmen and secretaries of each of the research councils. However neither of us has recently had any such meetings to discuss the levels of their budgets.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received the annual report of the Economic and Social Research Council for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The annual report of the Economic and Social Research Council has been submitted to my right hon. and learned Friend under the requirements of the Science and Technology Act 1965, and a copy is being laid before the House today.

I was most interested to read about the council's achievements in the first full year after its move to Swindon. I noted in particular the council's introduction of a new method of allocating course work awards; its creation of a new training strategy; and its continuing commitment to the development of new centres of excellence.

I congratulate the council on these and its many other achievements, and look forward to reading about further progress in next year's report.

Building Works

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will publish tables showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c) the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: The Department's own expenditure in respect of buildings is limited to those which are occupied by departmental staff. The information is given in the table.

Number of new buildings	0	0	0	1	1
Expenditure on new buildings (£000)	0	0	0	1,184	5,100
Expenditure on repairs and maintenance (including building renovations) (£000)	116	116	980	411	296

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mr. Eggar: The estimated cost for 1990-91 of fees to people appointed by the Secretary of State to non-departmental public bodies is £775,000. In addition there are a number of appointments to other bodies which do not normally attract payment. Information about reimbursement is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Architecture Courses

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information his Department supplies to students, outlining alternative funding arrangements for those studying five-year architecture courses giving exemption from parts 1 and 2 of the RIBA examination in architecture, following the de-designation of such courses by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Alan Howarth: A circular letter sent by the Department in August to local education authorities and higher education institutions asked them to inform their affected students of the following arrangements for support in 1990-91:

(a) courses leading to a first degree or comparable qualification giving exemption from part 1 of the RIBA examination continue to be designated for mandatory student awards from LEAs;

(b) separate courses leading to further qualifications giving exemption from part 2 cannot for legal reasons remain designated but eligible students will instead receive equivalent bursaries under a temporary scheme.

Funds and detailed guidance have been provided for the institutions administering the scheme, and most eligible students should have received their bursaries. The Department publicised the arrangements again in September, and has continued to explain them in response to any individual inquiries from students or others. A further circular letter was issued last month on the handling of any outstanding cases.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the cost of the common agricultural policy to the United Kingdom expressed in terms of the average cost in food bills and tax for a family of four.

Mr. Curry: The Government have long recognised that the CAP system of agricultural support, in common with the support policies of other industrial countries, gives rise to substantial costs to taxpayers and consumers compared with a situation in which foodstuffs were imported at world market prices with no support to domestic producers. Estimates of these costs, and the savings that could be secured if current policies were ended, are possible only by making many assumptions. Important judgments are necessary about the current levels of world prices—no simple matter given the wide variations in quotations and substantial fluctuations from year to year—and the changes in these prices if present policies were abandoned. The latter depends on how producers and consumers throughout the world might respond to the new circumstances and on the impact on such factors as exchange rates.

Estimates made by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, using a particular set of assumptions, imply that the transfers from consumers and taxpayers in 1989 resulting from agricultural policies in the European Community as a whole—separate figures for the United Kingdom are not available—were equivalent to £14 per week per family of four. (This is derived from the OECD estimate of the aggregate cost of 88·5 billion ecu for 1989, assuming the EC12 population is 324·8 million and that 1 ecu = £0·6733.) This is one estimate of the extent to which the CAP raises the cost of food and agricultural products, and incurs budgetary costs, compared to existing "world" prices. Those who quote this figure ignore the authors' note that the estimate is a static one: it takes no account of the effect that removal of farm support would have on world prices, and other variables, and thus gives no indication of the extent to which taxpayers and consumers might be better off if current policies were removed. A family of four would benefit by considerably less than £14 per week if all agricultural support were removed.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of reduced production due to set-aside in each year since its inception in tonnes of cereals and meat and also in value at real and 1990 prices.

Mr. Curry: The EC Commission has estimated that in the first year of the scheme 362,000 hectares were set aside in the Community representing a saving in production of between 1 million and 2 million tonnes of cereals. Recent information from the Commission suggests that a further 328,000 hectares have been set aside in the second year giving a total of 690,000 hectares which would represent a saving in production of between 1·9 million and 3·8 million tonnes of cereals. The Commission has not made available any estimates of value nor of impact on meat production.

Tributyltin

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what tests he has conducted for levels of tributyltin in fish and shellfish; if he will publish the results; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he is taking to ensure that fish stocks are prevented from contamination by the anti-fouling agent tributyltin; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what analysis he has carried out to assess the levels of tributyltin in United Kingdom coastal waters; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Curry: The Department began a programme to measure tributyltin (TBT) levels in water, fish and shellfish in 1982. Measures to control the use of TBT were introduced in 1986 and 1987. These include a ban on the use of TBT anti-fouling paints on boats less than 25 m in length. Since that time this Department, jointly with the Department of the Environment, has commissioned a more intensive research and monitoring programme to assess the efficacy of these control measures. Reports on this work have been published at regular intervals in the scientific press and brief details were included in the directorate of fisheries research aquatic environment monitoring report No. 22, copies of which are being placed in the Library of the House. Further more comprehensive and updated reports are currently in the process of being published. The results of this work show that TBT levels are declining and affected populations are recovering. Levels in the worst affected areas have declined by between six and ten-fold since 1986, as a direct result of the controls applied.

Work is now focused on establishing the most effective means of controlling inputs to harbours and other areas affected by the use of TBT anti-fouling paints on deep water ships.

Building Works

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish tables showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c) the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry took on responsibility for vote accounting and project sponsorship for major new buildings projects and major improvements to the existing buildings two years ago. Prior to this time the Department of the Environment's Property Services Agency held this responsibility and I have no details of actual expenditure incurred on projects for earlier years. Since 1988 details of proposals for individual projects with a total forecast cost exceeding £2 million have been published in the major projects table annex of this Department's published estimates with lesser projects treated in aggregate. The total expenditure details for the 1988-89 and 1989-90 financial years are:

Number of new buildings projects on which expenditure was incurred	11	12
Expenditure on new buildings projects (£ million)	8.62	8·40

	1988-89	1989-90
Expenditure on improvements to existing buildings (£ million)	7·35	1·40

The management of the maintenance of the Ministry's departmental estate was passed on from the DoE Property Services Agency on 1 April 1990. Previously the costs of repairs and maintenance were met by the Property Services Agency from sums recovered from Departments in the accommodation charge. I am therefore unable to publish figures.

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mr. Curry: This Department is responsible for appointments to a number of such bodies many of which attract the payment of fees and/or the reimbursement of expenses.

Because there are wide variations in the circumstances and in the manner in which these bodies are constituted, payments are made from a number of different accounts. Information on the totals is not collected centrally in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Indications of the level of remuneration paid to appointees to public bodies are, however, available in "Public Appointments: A Guide for Women's Organisations" (Women's National Commission, June 1990) and "Public Bodies" published annually by the Cabinet Office. Copies of both publications are available in the Library of the House.

Canthaxanthin

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies have been carried out into the possible carcinogenic properties of the pigment canthaxanthin.

Mr. Maclean: The results of carcinogenicity studies carried out on canthaxanthin are summarised in the monograph drawn up by the FAO-WHO joint expert committee on food additives. The monograph was recently published and a copy is being placed in the Library of the House.

The United Kingdom expert committees do not consider canthaxanthin to be a carcinogen but are concerned that canthaxanthin can form deposits in the human retina.

I summarised the Government's action on canthaxanthin in my reply to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 4 November 1990 at column 64.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his written answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North- East of 21 November, if he will give for each of the benefits and superseded benefits that he listed (a) their monetary value or range of monetary values on 1 January of each year since 1961, (b) the current monetary values or range of monetary values and (c) those values in real terms related to the retail prices index, using 1 January 1961 or the nearest available date as the base of 100·0 in each case.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Industrial Injuries (Benefit)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the Merseyside region of his Department have made claims for industrial injuries disablement benefit during the current year to date; how many have had their claims accepted; and what has been the total amount paid out in benefits.

Mr. Scott: In the period from 1 January to 31 October 1990, a total of 16,495 new claims have been received in all local offices covered by the Department's north western region. The table gives the number of claims received in each of the offices identified by the Department as being in Merseyside. Information about the number of successful claims and total amount of benefit paid is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Community Care

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will respond to the Social Services, Committee's ninth report, "Community Care: Social Security for Disabled People"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We are in the process of examining and considering the contents of the report and we will be publishing our response in due course.

Building Works

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will publish tables showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c) the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: Responsibility for new buildings, renovation and repairs is shared by the Department of the Environment and the Department of Social Security, and the division of this responsibility has changed over the period in question. It would not be possible to provide the information in the form requested except at disproportionate cost. However, new buildings for sole occupation by the Department have been completed as follows since April 1988, when the Department acquired responsibility for major works expenditure:

Year	Number of new builds	Total cost (£ million)
1988-89	2	2·689
1990-91	3	15·770

The total cost includes expenditure incurred by the Department of the Environment prior to April 1988.

The total expenditure on new works and maintenance within the Department's delegated responsibility is given in the table. For the period prior to April 1989 the information covers the combined Department of Health and Social Security, and certain capital projects in which both the Department of Social Security and the Department of Health have an interest continue to be funded by the Department of Social Security.

Year	New works[1] (£ million)	Maintenance (£ million)
[2]1986-87	0·123	4·824
[3]1987-88	10·314	7·132
1988-89	[4]42·561	7·002
1989-90	89·001	7·735
[5]1990-91	91·181	[6]18·284

[1] New works expenditure encompasses all capital projects including new builds, renovations and adaptations as a result of changed operational requirements.

[2] For 1986-87, the Department was responsible only for certain new works and maintenance projects up to the value of £1,000.

[3] From 1987-88, the Department became responsible for certain new works up to a value of £150,000 and for maintenance projects up to a value of £5,000.

[4] From 1988-89, expenditure included all new works projects irrespective of value.

[5] The figures for this year are forecasts.

[6] From 1990-91, the Department became responsible for all maintenance projects on a proportion of the estate.

The hon. Member will be aware of the new works project at the Stoke North local social security office completed this year. The project involved adaptation and improvement of the reception and waiting areas at a cost of £360,000. This amount is included in the table.

SCOTLAND

Firearms

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has received any representations concerning the implications for recreational shooters in Scotland of the implementation of article (5A) of European Community draft directive Com. 89 446 final, on the possession of firearms.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Seven representations have been received in connection with this draft directive.

Military Casualties

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what hospitals have been designed for the treatment of military casualties in the event of conflict in the Gulf.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Crossroads (Scotland)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funding will be made available for the Scottish charity Crossroads (Scotland) care attendant schemes.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Local authorities and health boards are the main sources of funding to local Crossroads schemes. According to Crossroads' own statistics £669,000 was made available from these authorities in the financial year 1989-90. My Department is paying a grant of £23,865 in the current year. This meets approximately 30 per cent. of the costs of the headquarters organisation of Crossroads (Scotland) which provides direction and support to local Crossroads projects.

Action on Phobias Association

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funding will be made available for the Scottish charity Action on Phobias Association, to pay for a development officer.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The organisation's request for grant, one of many worthwhile applications competing for finite resources, is being considered at present. It is too early to offer any assessment of its likely chance of success but I hope that a decision will be reached early next year.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what initiatives he has taken in respect of research into alcohol misuse and the social effects of alcohol misuse in Scotland; and how much money he has made available for this purpose in the current financial year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Alcohol misuse and alcohol-related problems have been identified as a priority area for research supported by the Scottish Office for many years.

Estimated expenditure on external alcohol-related research in the 1990-91 financial year is £15,000. Additional funds are available and applications for soundly based research projects will be sympathetically considered. In addition, an evaluation of experimental byelaws to prohibit the consumption of alcohol in designated public places is being conducted internally by the Scottish Office.

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mr. Lang: The annual remuneration paid to those appointed to non-departmental public bodies within my responsibilities as at 1 July 1989 is set out in pages 60 to 68 and 85 of the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1989", a copy of which is available in the Library. The 1990 edition is due to be published later this month. Information on the annual cost of reimbursement of expenses is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mature Students

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has received about the number of mature students who have been obliged to withdraw from courses in colleges of further education in the current academic year due to financial difficulties.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 22 November 1990]: Apart from the cases raised in correspondence by the hon. Member himself, we have no evidence that there have been significant withdrawals by mature students in general.

In the current academic session only 10 mature students have withdrawn from those courses at Scottish colleges of further education which are supported under the students' allowances scheme. There is nothing to suggest that any of these students withdrew due to financial difficulties. Indeed, with the introduction of student loans, we have increased student support by 25 per cent. this session. We have also allocated some £1·06 million in access funds to Scottish further education colleges to distribute to students experiencing financial hardship.

Teachers

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ensure regional councils have consultative machinery with teachers which reflects the constitution of the Scottish Joint Negotiating Committee.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 December 1990]: Consultative machinery at local level is a matter for regional and islands councils in consultation with the bodies representing teachers. It clearly makes sense to take into account the composition of national negotiating machinery for teachers when determining the local arrangements.

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the level at which domestic rates in Wales would have to be fixed in 1990-91 in order to raise the same amount as under the community charge.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The estimated average rate bill per ratepayer for Wales in 1990-91 is £430 or 3 per cent. over 1989-90. For a detailed breakdown for each local authority I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) on 11 May 1990.

Community Care

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the level of funding for community care services in Wales in (a) 1979 and (b) 1990.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is not available in precisely the form requested, but I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on Thursday 5 July 1990. Expenditure on community health services in 1989-90 was £108·5 million.

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of community psychiatric nurses in Wales at the present time; and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information is available only on the total staff in post for all nursing and midwifery staff. Between September 1979 and 1989 the whole-time equivalents of these had risen by 22 per cent. to 28,037 (this does not take into account the reduction in nurses' hours in 1980).

The Department is working closely with district health authorities to enable accurate breakdowns of these staff into areas of work to be made in future.

Rents to Mortgages

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the current position regarding the rents-to-mortgages scheme in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: In the first 12 months of the scheme 17 per cent. of eligible tenants have expressed an interest. More than 60 (nearly 8 per cent.) have applied to become flexi-owners. Fourteen sales (nearly 2 per cent.) have been completed.

Unadopted Streets

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is his latest estimate of the number of unadopted streets in Wales and the cost of making up such streets;

(2) how many unadopted streets were adopted by each of the Welsh local authorities in each of the last 10 years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is not held centrally.

Employment Training

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales on the latest available figures went into full-time jobs after completing a course of employment training.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The latest results from the follow-up survey of employment training leavers show that 35 per cent. of respondents were in full-time employment three months after leaving the scheme. A further 10 per cent. were in part-time employment, voluntary work or further education.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales on the latest available figures are still unemployed having completed a course of employment training.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The latest results from the follow-up survey of employment training leavers show that 50 per cent. of respondents were unemployed three months after leaving the scheme.

Coal Exports

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current level of coal exports from Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The latest available figures show that, in the six months to the end of June 1990, 178,048 tonnes of coal were exported from Welsh ports.

Registered Second Homes

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the number of registered second homes by district area as at (a) 1 April 1980, (b) 1 April 1985 and (c) 1 April 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is not available in the form requested. Some information on the proportion of second or holiday homes identified in each district during the 1986 Welsh inter-censal survey is published in table A1.2 of the report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Roads, Dyfed

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the rate of progress of regrading Dyfed roads.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Cardigan bypass is to be completed this month, ahead of schedule. Plans for other improvements to trunk roads are set out in "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s". A supplement updating this information is to be published in the new year. Improvements to local roads are a matter for Dyfed county council.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to build the eastern approach road in Aberystwyth during the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A feasibility study on the A44/A487 Aberystwyth approach roads, commissioned by the Department, has recently been completed. It is too soon to say what proposals might emerge from it.

Coal Imports

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the present level of coal imports into Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The latest available figures show that, to the end of June 1990, 1,829,552 tonnes of coal were imported into Welsh ports.

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to extend the boundaries of the Development Board for Rural Wales to include parts of north Pembrokeshire, including Fishguard and Goodwick; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No.

Pembrokeshire Health Authority

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the further information referred to in his reply on Tuesday 27 November regarding Pembrokeshire health authority's national health service trust bid.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on Tuesday 4 December 1990.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sum of money he calculates would be adequate to provide a high-standard service in each county in Wales to tackle the problem of alcohol abuse; and on what he has based his calculation.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: It is for local and health authorities to determine and respond to local needs for alcohol misuse services as part of their normal development of services. Central Government support is being made available to encourage local initiatives, but should not be regarded as a substitute for local funding. A total of £150,000 has been earmarked this year to combat alcohol misuse in Wales.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the criteria on which organisations in Wales are being selected to receive part of the £150,000 funding for projects to help combat alcohol misuse announced by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary at his Department on Drinkwise Day in June.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Guidance for organisations wishing to bid for a share of these resources is being issued this week and I shall be placing a copy in the Library of the House.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he has taken in respect of research into alcohol misuse and the social effects of alcohol misuse in Wales; and how much money he has made available for this purpose in the current financial year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given earlier today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of formal training days being given, since their inception, to the new district health authority members in Wales, by district health authority and in total.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Department does not keep records of training that may be provided at the local level by district health authorities (DHAs).

At the all-Wales level, a one-and-a-half day briefing event was held for all new DHA members in October this year, to provide general briefing on the organisation and finance of the NHS in Wales. A one-and-a-half day induction course was also provided in November.

A further five-day programme covering such issues as strategic planning, care in the community, purchaser-provider roles, finance, contracts, resource management and medical audit is planned for the period January to May 1991.

NHS Reform

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the administrative cost of introducing the reforms affecting the national health service in Wales as itemised in the National Health Service and Community Care Act.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The estimated recurrent administrative cost of introducing the NHS reforms in Wales, as itemised in the financial and explanatory memorandum to the National Health Service and Community Care Bill is £8·650 million per annum.

Building Works

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will publish tables showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c) the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has not financed any new buildings for its own use during the last five years. Expenditure incurred by my Department during that period on repairs, maintenance and improvements (renovation work is not separately identifiable) was as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure £
1986-87	225,195
1987-88	219,014
1988-89	299,405
1989-90	686,144

Expenditure incurred by the Property Services Agency on my Department's behalf is not included in these figures.

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mr. David Hunt: Salaries of members of non-departmental public bodies are set out in "Public Bodies 1989", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Private Streets

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what detailed amendments to the law on the adoption of private streets he is considering; and when he intends to bring forward legislation;

(2) whether he intends to review and simplify the working of the private street works code to reflect experience of the Highways Act 1980 and subsequent Scottish law.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

After a review in 1983 of private street works law for England and Wales, it was decided to maintain both the principle of frontager liability and the arrangements for the adoption of private streets. Some minor amendments may be necessary in the future. Private street works law in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

EMPLOYMENT

European Social Fund

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the reason for the delay in announcing ESF funding allocation.

Mr. Forth: There have been a number of difficulties with the implementation of the new requirements under the reformed ESF this year. A major cause of the delays was the late approval by the Commission of the operational programmes for 1990 onwards in August this year. It was only then that work on the individual applications for ESF support could start. Some 2,500 applications have been submitted, of which over 1,500 were received by my Department at the end of September. The vast majority had to be returned for revision because of errors. My Department is doing everything possible to expedite the process and to authorise payments to applicants.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average length of time schemes have been operating without funding whilst awaiting the outcome of the ESF bids.

Mr. Forth: This information is not available.

It is only once an application for ESF assistance has been approved, and a claim for a first advance payment made, that my Department is notified of the scheme's actual start date. Moreover, the European social fund provides only up to 50 per cent. of the funding of schemes.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to announce details of ESF funding arrangements.

Mr. Forth: My Department indicated in May this year the amounts of money likely to be available to the main groups of organisations involved in the European social fund in 1990. The European Commission gave its approval for our operational programmes only in August this year. Since then some 2,500 applications have been submitted, of which 1,500 were received by my Department at the end of September. The vast majority had to be returned for revision because of errors. My Department is doing everything possible to expedite the process. Some payments have already been made and it is hoped to complete the process by the end of January.

Job Losses, Durham

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he will take to prevent further job losses following the recent loss of jobs at the Philips factory in Durham.

Mr. Jackson: Staffing levels are a matter for the commercial judgment of the companies concerned.

My Department, through its Employment Service and training, enterprise and education directorate, and through the training and enterprise councils, operates a wide range of employment, enterprise and training measures to help unemployed people find new jobs, retrain or set up businesses of their own.

Administrative Costs

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the administrative costs of his Department rose by more or less than the retail prices index in the last financial year.

Mr. Jackson: The gross administrative costs of my Department rose by 5·2 per cent. in the last financial year —considerably less than the retail prices index, which rose by 9·4 per cent. over the same period.

Purchasing

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were his Department's (a) best and (b) worst purchases made in the current month as measured against the Government's supply index.

Mr. Forth: The best and worst purchases have been identified by comparing actual cost per unit with the Government's supply index average cost and are based on prices paid by those parts of the Department of Employment group subscribing to the Government's supply index.

	Actual price per unit £
Best price
386 PC personal computers	985

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the 10 worst purchases made by his Department in the month of October as measured against the Government's supply index.

Mr. Forth: The worst purchases have been identified by comparing actual cost per unit with the Government's supply index average cost and are based on prices paid by those parts of the Department of Employment group subscribing to the Government's supply index.

Ten worst—October

Description	Actual price per unit £
1. Exercise books	0·13

4. Box files	2·71
5. Computer listing paper (1,000 sheets)	8·95
6. Battery	0·32
7. 5·25" floppy disk	0·77
8. 5·25" floppy disk	0·75

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the purchasing policy of his Department.

Mr. Forth: My Department is bound by the Government policy that purchasers should base all procurement of goods and services on value for money, including quality (or fitness for purpose) and delivery against price.

In accordance with that policy goods and services are acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Under EC rules, and the GATT GPA where appropriate, my Department is obliged to award relevant contracts in accordance with prescribed procedures aimed at avoiding discrimination on grounds of nationality.

Education Business Partnerships

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans the Government have for supporting local education business partnerships.

Mr. Howard: I am pleased to announce, on behalf of myself and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, that my Department has today issued a prospectus inviting training and enterprise councils to apply for funds to launch and extend local education business partnerships in collaboration with local education authorities and others.

Partnerships will be able to use the funds provided through TECs to support work experience for students and teachers, business visits to schools, science and technology projects and a wide range of innovatory activities bringing benefits to both education and business.

I am looking to TECs, local education authorities and other community organisations to build partnerships which help to raise the aspirations and achievements of students in education and training, of all ages or abilities and which contribute to our future prosperity.

My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland will make separate announcements about their arrangements for partnerships.

HSE Annual Report

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much the Health and Safety Executive's annual report costs (a) to produce and (b) to print; how much it is sold for; how many copies are sold; and how much profit is made on it.

Mr. Forth: The costs of producing the Health and Safety Commission's annual report vary from year to year. The most recent report (for 1988-89, published in February 1990) cost approximately £34,000 to produce, of which the print costs were £14,834. The report is priced at £10; and 1,466 copies had been sold by end-October 1990. No profit has been made to date on sales of the report.

Youth Training (Accidents)

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many fatal, major and minor reportable accidents have occurred on YTS for each quarter since 1 October 1989; and what these figures were by region and as a percentage of total YTS trainees in each year.

Mr. Jackson: The table gives the numbers of fatal, major and minor reportable accidents which occurred in YTS for each quarter since October 1989, by region. The figures are provisional.

Accident rates are expressed as an annual rate per 100,000 trainees. The latest available figure for all accidents is 829 per 100,000 for the year 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990.

Notes:
1. Employment Department figures are compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive on employed persons. However, the Employment Department's figures will include a number of accidents to trainees in educational establishments and road traffic accidents which may not have been reportable to the Health and Safety Executive had the individual been employed.
2. Major accidents are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.

Training

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much has been spent on training in the past year; what were the figures in 1975 and 1978 in real and money terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Records are kept on the basis of the standard financial year for Government expenditure, which runs from 1 April to 31 March.

The total expenditure on training by the Department of Employment group training, enterprise and education directorate (and its predecessors the Training Agency, Training Commission and the Manpower Services Commission) in 1975-76, 1978-79 and 1989-90 at cash and constant (1990-91) prices is as follows:

£ million

	Cash prices	Constant (1990-91) prices
1975-76	171·7	620·2
1978-79	377·3	954·3
1989-90	2,638·8	2,871·5

Figures are shown at cash and constant (estimated) 1990-91 prices calculated by use of the GDP deflator index from the Chancellor's autumn statement.

DEFENCE

Building Works

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish tables showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c) the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is shown in the table:

New works expenditure (£ million)	880	905	886	1,018	1,155
Maintenance expenditure (£ million)	659	564	604	634	1,011
Major projects completed	9	11	12	6	Not available

Notes:
1. All figures relate to works and so encompass more than simply buildings.
2. Major projects are those with a works cost of more than £6 million.
3. Expenditure figures exclude PSA costs. 1990-91 figures reflect the transfer of responsibility between PSA and MOD, and so are not directly comparable with previous years.
4. 1989-90 and 1990-91 expenditure figures are derived from the original supply estimates. Earlier years are outturns.
5. Data on expenditure on building renovation are not separately available.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will detail the dates when the nuclear reactor systems of each submarine of the Valiant-Churchill and Polaris classes, together with the dates for the first two boats commissioned in the Swiftsure class, were last examined; and if any defects were found in the reactor system;

(2) if he will provide an estimated cost of the repairs and/or modifications required to correct the defects in any Polaris class submarines;

(3) if he will detail the nature of the nuclear reactor system defect in HMS Warspite, together with any findings or recommendations made at that time by or to his Department;

(4) when the defect of the pressurised water reactor coolant system in HMS Valiant was discovered;

(5) if he will detail the nuclear submarines in which the same type of reactor system defect exists as is present in HMS Warspite;

(6) when the nuclear safety certificate, or similar document, for HMS Conqueror was last issued; and what was the date on which this certificate ceased to be effective.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the last date on which a letter of authorisation was issued for the operation of the nuclear propulsion plant of (a) HMS Renown, (b) HMS Resolution, (c) HMS Repulse and (d) HMS Revenge; and if authorisation has since been rescinded;

(2) whether his Department is to seek financial compensation from Rolls-Royce for the generic nuclear reactor fault on submarines powered by the Rolls-Royce P1 nuclear reactor.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice to comment on matters relating to the design of nuclear-powered submarines or on their material state. I can, however, confirm that our nuclear submarines operate in accordance with rigorous safety standards and with the endorsement of our independent safety advisers.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if work on the refitting of HMS Warspite and HMS Churchill extended beyond the date when the defect in the nuclear reactor system of each boat became known;

(2) if he will provide the overall cost of refitting (a) HMS Warspite and (b) HMS Churchill and list the cost of that section of the refit programme in both (a) and (b) completed after knowledge of the defect in the nuclear reactors came to light.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is not our practice to publish details of nuclear submarine refits. However, in a typical nuclear submarine refit the majority of the spend is incurred in the earlier stages, with relatively little incurred in the final stages. At termination in September 1990, Warspite's refit was substantially complete and Churchill was two thirds finished.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make public the findings of the nuclear warship safety committee that reviewed the safety of operation of the nuclear propulsion systems of the Valiant-Churchill and Polaris class submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. The committee's advice is provided in confidence to the Secretary of State. I can confirm that the Ministry of Defence has acted fully in accordance with nuclear-powered warship safety committee advice regarding the operation and inspection of our nuclear submarines.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide the estimated and actual radiation dose equivalent uptake resulting from the current inspection programme of the nuclear reactor systems of the Valiant-Churchill and Polaris class submarines.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is not the Department's policy to comment on matters relating to the design of our nuclear-powered submarines or on their material state. The hon. Gentleman may be assured, however, that our stringent policy on radiological protection, which was commended by the House of Commons Defence Committee recently, is applied throughout the Department. Rigorous steps are being taken to keep all doses as low as reasonably practicable.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the number of weeks that each of the Valiant-Churchill and Polaris class submarine boats have put to sea under their own nuclear power propulsion during the last three years;

(2) if he will specify the last date when HMS Valiant put to sea under its own nuclear power propulsion system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our general practice to disclose such details of the operational movements of Royal Navy submarines.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will detail the stages and time scales involved in the decommissioning of nuclear-powered submarines;

(2) if he will provide an estimate of the number of civilian employees engaged at each stage of the decommissioning of each nuclear-powered submarine;

(3) if he will provide details of the decommissioning programmes for the HMS submarines Warspite, Churchill and Conqueror, stating when and at which royal dockyard each submarine is to be decommissioned; when, where and to what extent each submarine reactor compartment and its machinery is to be dismantled; when and where the radioactive components are to be stored or disposed of; when the remainder of each submarine is to be entirely dismantled and disposed of; when and where the submarines are to be laid up; and what is the anticipated cost for each submarine and the total costs of the entire decommissioning programme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The first stage of the decommissioning programmes for each submarine will be a package of work contracted to Devonport Management Ltd. or Babcock Thorn Ltd. as appropriate in the royal dockyards, to defuel, de-equip and prepare each boat for a period of storage afloat. Detailed specifications for this work are being prepared and it is too early to determine time scale and cost. The manpower input, and hence employment consequences, are primarily a matter for the contractor. The subject of disposal of nuclear submarines is under active consideration but no final decision has yet been made.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department is undertaking discussions with the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive Ltd. with regard to securing a means of storage and/or disposal of radioactive materials and components removed from nuclear-powered submarines during decommissioning.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: NIREX is aware, through routine contacts, of the MOD's potential requirements arising from the disposal of nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under whose military command the Polaris class submarine comes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Commander-in-Chief Fleet.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many individual Polaris class submarines have failed to undertake a scheduled patrol at any time during each of the last three years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our general practice to disclose such details of Royal Navy submarine deployments. I can confirm, however, that Polaris submarine deterrent patrols have been, and continue to be, carried out in accordance with our policy to keep at least one such boat at sea at all times.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when it was announced to the ship's company of HMS Valiant that the boat was to be withdrawn from active service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No such announcement has been made.

HMS Trenchant

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the steps his Department has taken to ensure that the log of the submarine HMS Trenchant for its operations during Thursday 22 November is made available for purposes of inquiries undertaken by statutory bodies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The relevant sections of the log will be made available to the investigating authorities as necessary.

Christmas Mail (Gulf)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 302, if he will state what action he has taken to ensure that all families of British soldiers serving in the Gulf are informed that the final date for posting air mail parcels in time for Christmas at the forces concessionary rate is 1 December.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Detailed information on postal arrangements for forces mail to service personnel in the Gulf, including the latest posting dates for parcels under the forces concessionary rate, has been published through both official and welfare channels.

Within BAOR, from whence the majority of personnel deployed, the information has been published through forces radio, television and newspapers as well as information sheets at forces post offices and through discussions with wives' clubs.

Within the United Kingdom, similar information has been provided through unit families officers and welfare services, post office posters, and press releases by both the Royal Mail and the Ministry of Defence. In addition a Royal Mail parcelforce hotline (0800 224466) has been established specifically to deal with inquiries from members of the public on postal arrangements to the Gulf.

TRANSPORT

Train Passengers (Falls)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to require British Rail to publish the details and results of its investigations into the incidences of passengers falling from moving trains.

Mr. McLoughlin: This is a matter for British Rail to consider. Information on such incidents is contained in the chief inspecting officer of railways' annual report.

Aviation Fuel (Transport)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which emergency services were involved in the clean-up operation following the derailment and spillage of aviation fuel at the Isle of Grain on 28 November; what were the costs; and which body met each area of cost.

Mr. Freeman: Several organisations assisted at the scene of the accident, including the fire, police and ambulance services. I understand that the three emergency services were not directly involved in the clean-up operation and that they expect to meet their own costs. It is too early to know the total costs of the clean-up operation and the apportionment of them.

Defence Planning and Emergencies

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the current responsibilities of the defence planning and emergencies division within his Department; how many full and part-time staff are employed; and what was the annual budget for each of the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The current responsibilities of the defence planning and emergencies division are to develop and maintain plans for the use of surface transport, including shipping, in crisis and war; to maintain departmental civil emergency plans and emergency facilities within the Department of Transport; and to manage Government-owned wrecks and their cargoes. Thirty-four full-time staff are employed, one of whom is seconded to another Department.

The annual budget for the division over the past five years is as follows:

	£000s
1985-86	3,579
1986-87	3,432
1987-88	2,071
1988-89	2,795
1989-90	2,468

Purchasing

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the 10 worst purchases made by his Department in the month of October as measured against the Government's supply index.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not keep a central record of prices paid for each item purchased. Sample checks reveal that the prices paid for items on the GSI list were close to or lower than the GSI average prices.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the purchasing policy of his Department.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department is bound by the Government's policy that purchasers should base all procurement of goods and services on value for money, including quality (or fitness for purpose) and delivery against price. In accordance with that policy, goods and services are acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Under EC rules, and the GATT Government procurement agreement (GPA) where appropriate, the Department is obliged to award relevant contracts in accordance with prescribed procedures aimed at avoiding discrimination on grounds of nationality.

Driving Tests (Wales)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many driving tests have been completed in each test area in Wales; and what the success rate has been for 1988, 1989 and 1990 to date.

Mr. Chope: I have asked the chief executive of the Driving Standards Agency to reply to the hon. Member direct.

Rail Freight

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the Rail Freight Distribution United Kingdom Business Review report from the board of British Rail; and when it will be made public.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that the British Railways Board is currently considering the conclusions of Railfreight Distribution's review. Publication of the report would be a matter for British Rail.

Vessel Modification

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the inspection of the vessel the Cam Spirit in December 1989 revealed about modifications to make her more manoeuvrable since her name was changed from the Silver Pit.

Mr. McLoughlin: The name was changed nine months after the inspection referred to. A survey was not required, nor was one undertaken. I understand, however, that substantial changes have been made to improve the reliability of the manoeuvring system.

London Underground

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to dismiss the chairman of London Underground unless London Underground escalators at (a) St. John's Wood underground station and (b) elsewhere are in full working order by Saturday 15 December.

Mr. Freeman: No. A year ago we set London Underground Ltd. (LUL) a target of improved escalator availability, and LUL has made encouraging progress towards meeting that target. The target my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Transport set LUL in December 1989 was to increase overall escalator availability on the underground from 78 per cent.—1988-89 average—to 86 per cent. by 31 March 1992. Performance figures up to mid-September show LUL has achieved 84 per cent. I suggest the hon. Member discusses the availability of particular escalators with London Underground Ltd.

Offshore Installations (Safety)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what modifications have been made to his Department's code for standby vessels for North sea operations since the Piper Alpha disaster.

Mr. McLoughlin: None. A revised code was submitted to the public inquiry which will be amended in the light of Lord Cullen's recommendations.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Election Documents

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General (1) on how many occasions between 11 June 1987 and 31 August 1988 officers of MI5 were granted access to any parliamentary ballot papers and counterfoils and the marked electoral registers, returns, declarations and other election documents in the custody of the clerk of the Crown;

(2) on how many occasions between 11 June 1987 and 31 August 1988 civil servants were granted access to any parliamentary ballot papers and counterfoils and the marked electoral registers, returns, declarations and other election documents in the custody of the clerk of the Crown.

The Attorney-General: None, as far as is known. Under parliamentary elections rules set out in schedule 1 to the Representation of the People Act 1983, ballot papers, counterfoils and certificates of employment on duty on the day of the poll are to be produced only on the order of the House of Commons or a competent court. No such orders were received during the period mentioned. All the other election documents specified by the Act are required to be open to public access, and applicants are not required to state their occupations or purposes.

Mr. Archer: To ask the Attorney-General if he will detail the precautions taken to prevent unauthorised access to parliamentary ballot papers, counterfoils, marked electoral registers, returns, declarations and other election documents in the custody of the clerk of the Crown under schedule 1, part V, rule 55 of the Representation of the People Act 1983.

The Attorney-General: Parliamentary election documents are stored in a locked warehouse on a 24-hour patrolled secure Government site in Greater London. Only selected staff of the Lord Chancellor's Department have access to the warehouse and its contents.

Mr. Archer: To ask the Attorney-General what was the number of orders made between 11 June 1987 and 31 August 1988 under schedule 1, part V, rule 56 of the Representation of the People Act 1983.

The Attorney-General: No such orders for production of election documents were received during the period stated. The only documents produced were those where public inspection is authorised under schedule 1, rule 57(2), of the 1983 Act.

Mr. Archer: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions between 11 June 1987 and 31 August 1988 police officers were given access to any parliamentary ballot papers and counterfoils and the marked electoral registers, returns, declarations and other election documents in the custody of the clerk of the Crown.

The Attorney-General: Under the parliamentary elections rules set out in schedule 1 to the Representation of the People Act 1983, ballot papers, counterfoils and certificates of employment on duty on the day of the poll are to be produced only on the order of the House of Commons or a competent court. No such orders were received during the period mentioned. All the other election documents, including marked election registers, specified by the Act are required to be open to public access, and applicants are not required to state their occupations or purposes. Applicants stating themselves to be police officers were given access to marked election registers on five occasions during the period mentioned.

Court of Appeal

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General how many convictions the Director of Public Prosecutions has defended before the Court of Appeal in each of the last five years; and in how many of these he did not express a view as to the innocence or guilt of the defendant.

The Attorney-General: Records maintained by the Crown prosecution service do not include a total figure for the number of cases proceeding to the Court of Appeal as appeals against conviction. The total number of appeals against conviction heard by the Court of Appeal between 1986 and 1990 is set out in the table; the vast majority would have been conducted by the Crown prosecution service.

It is only where exceptional circumstances prevail that the Crown prosecution service does not seek to resist an appeal against conviction; the number of such cases arising in each of the last five years could be ascertained only by a disproportionate expense to the taxpayer.

Appeals against conviction heard by full court

	Number
1985	528
1986	534
1987	343
1988	420
1989	500
1990	[1]569

[1]To 30 November.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: [illegible]sk the Attorney-General when the Director of Public Prosecutions is proposing to make available to solicitors for the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bomings all the material relevant to the preparations of grounds for appeal.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has disclosed a substantial amount of material to the solicitors representing the appellants. Arrangements are being made for the disclosure of outstanding material in his possession, insofar as this is appropriate in accordance with the Attorney-General's guidelines on disclosure. This has been explained to those representing the appellants. Any further material provided to the Director of Public Prosecutions will be considered and disclosed, if this is appropriate in accordance with the guidelines.

PRIME MINISTER

The Gulf (Ecological Consequences)

Q9. Mr. Tam Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment has been made of the ecological consequences of a military option in the Gulf.

The Prime Minister: On any realistic estimate, the main effect would be to increase annual world CO_2 emissions by a small amount. Any environmental damage is undesirable, but the international community believes that the issues at stake are overriding. The way to avoid any of the consequences to which the hon. Member draws attention is for Saddam Hussein to comply with the resolutions of the United Nations and to withdraw from Kuwait.

Staff

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the names, duties and grading of those now employed in his office.

The Prime Minister: The senior staff currently employed in my office and paid from public funds are:

Name	Grade	Position
Mr. A. Turnbull	Grade 2	Principal Private Secretary
Mr. C. D. Powell	Grade 3	Private Secretary—Overseas Affairs
Mr. D. C. B. Morris	Grade 5	Private Secretary—Parliamentary Affairs
Mr. B. Potter	Grade 5	Private Secretary—Economic Affairs
Miss C. A. Slocock	Grade 7	Private Secretary—Home Affairs
Mr. J. R. Catford	Grade 5	Secretary for Appointments
Mr. A. T. O'Donnell	Grade 3	Chief Press Secretary
Mr. T. J. Perks	Grade 5	Deputy Chief Press Secretary
Mr. C. Fountain	Grade 7	Security Co-ordinator
Mrs. S. Hogg	Grade 1A	Head of Policy Unit
Mr. J. Mills	Grade 5	Policy Adviser
Miss C. Sinclair	Grade 5	Policy Adviser

In addition, there are currently 56 employed on administrative and support duties. I am considering further appointments to my policy unit.

Downing Street (Gates)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if he has any plans to remove the gates to the entrance to Downing street.

The Prime Minister: No.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Prime Minister when the Cabinet Office will issue an up-to-date edition of the document intituled "List of Ministerial Responsibilities."

The Prime Minister: An up-to-date edition will be deposited in the Library as soon as possible after ministerial responsibilities in Departments have been determined.

Department of Energy

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Prime Minister whether it is his intention to retain the Department of Energy as a separate Department.

The Prime Minister: My present expectation is that work in the energy area will justify the retention of a separate department at least until the end of this Parliament.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools, Wandsworth

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much central Government resourcing will be used to facilitate the setting up of (a) the Battersea Park city technology college (b) the ADT city technology college in Wandsworth and (c) a new Church of England voluntary aided school in Sutherland grove in terms of (i) money and (ii) lost value by virtue of releasing sites at less than market value.

Mr. Eggar: In respect of (a) and (c), I would refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave on 3 December, at columns 14 and 15 respectively. No lease or sale of property for the purposes of establishing the institutions referred to by the hon. Member has taken place in either case. On (b), the total capital cost of the ADT college, Wandsworth CTC will be £11 million of which the Department's 80 per cent. contribution will be £8·8 million. The site for the college was made available at relevant market value.

ENVIRONMENT

Trees

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take in respect of the interim summary of the scientific review group on tree health in the United Kingdom; and when he expects the final report to be published.

Mr. Baldry: The terrestrial effects sub group report, "Air Pollution and Tree Health In the United Kingdom", will be published in March 1991. No interim summary will be published before that time. Copies of the final report will be deposited in the Library of the House.

Purchasing

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what were his Department's (a) best and (b) worst purchases made in the current month as measured against the Government's supply index;

(2) what were the 10 worst purchases made by his Department in the month of October as measured against the Government's supply index.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department devotes considerable attention to its purchasing policy. It purchases a wide range of goods and services, which is only partly covered by the Government supply index. Where possible, note is taken of the prices obtained by other Departments, but potential suppliers are assessed against a number of other factors also, in order to obtain best value for money and take full account of environmental considerations. In the case of large or long-term contracts formal tendering procedures are followed. A great many current purchases are made at advantageous rates under long-term or call-off contracts negotiated some time ago. It is therefore not possible to make a meaningful comparison of present prices within the GSI against those obtained by the Department's purchasing procedures.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the purchasing policy of his Department.

Mr. Heseltine: The Government's policy is that purchasers should base all procurement of goods and services on value for money, including quality, fitness for purpose and delivery against price. In accordance with that policy, goods and services are acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Under EC rules, and the GATT Government procurement agreement where appropriate, my Department is obliged to award relevant contracts in accordance with prescribed procedures aimed at avoiding discrimination on grounds of nationality.

Administrative Costs

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the administrative costs of his Department rose by more or less than the retail price index in the last financial year.

Mr. Heseltine: The outturn for my Department was only 6 per cent. higher in 1989-90 than in 1988-89—less than the increase in the retail prices index between those two years.

Birds Directive

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will consider contesting the legal action pending against the United Kingdom for non-compliance with the 1979 birds directive.

Mr. Baldry: We recently learnt that the European Commission may bring forward a proposal for amending the relevant provisions of the directive. We shall consider what action may be required when the Commission has clarified its intentions, but we hope the matter can be settled without referral to the court.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will urge his colleagues in the Council of Ministers to recommend to the European Commission the reinstatement of the pests annex to the 1979 birds directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We intend to raise the question of pest control under the directive at the next meeting of the Environment Council.

Connection Charges

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has about the rate of increase in connection charges for new house building by each utility company since privatisation;

(2) what discussions he has had with utility companies regarding the future level of increase of connection charges for new house building.

Mr. Baldry: Under section 79 of the Water Act 1989, a new system of infrastructure charges was introduced from 1 April 1990 for new connections to domestic water or sewerage services. The initial limits on these charges set by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales are increased each year in line with the retail prices index.

Increases in other charges made by companies, including any other charges related to connections, are restricted to the increase in the retail prices index plus the K factors set by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the next 10 years and laid down in companies' instruments of appointment, copies of which are available in the Library.

Both the K factors and the limits on infrastructure charges are now subject to review and amendment by the Director General of Water Services.

Urban Programme

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive a report from Victor Hausner and Associates on its research into the use of the urban programme in creating employment opportunities for black and ethnic minority communities in the inner cities.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend expects to receive the final report of this research project early in 1991.

Local Authority Accounts

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what sanctions exist against local authorities in breach of their statutory duty to produce accounts for audit; and what action he proposes to take against those in serious breach.

Mr. Portillo: Any person failing without reasonable excuse to comply with the statutory requirements is liable to prosecution. The auditor is best placed to judge whether such legal action is warranted or likely to succeed.

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities which are currently in breach of their statutory obligations to produce their annual audit accounts, setting against each the number of years of default.

Mr. Portillo: The Audit Commission issued in February a list of 29 local authorities in England and Wales which had failed to publish their 1988-89 statements of accounts before the statutory deadline of 31 December 1989. I am arranging for a copy of the list to be placed in the Library of the House. The commission's annual report for 1989-90 stated that nine of these authorities had still not published 1988-89 accounts by June 1990.

Building Works

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish tables showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c) the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 5 December 1990]: The following tables show the information requested in respect of:

(1) the building work funded up to March 1990 by the Property Services Agency, and thereafter by Property Holdings, as part of their responsibilities for the management of the Civil and Parliamentary Estates;

(2) the Department of the Environment's own accommodation.

The figures reflect the gradual transfer of responsibility for new building and maintenance services to occupying departments throughout the period. Information on the number of new building projects prior to 1 April 1988 is available only at disproportionate cost.

(1) Civil and Parliamentary Estates

	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89 (iii)	1989-90	1990-91 (Forecast) (iv)
a. Number of new building projects, including renovations and acquisitions (i) (ii)			39	37	32
b. Amount spent on new buildings, including renovation (£ million)	211	301	194	102	102
c. Amount spent on repairs and maintenance (£ million)	147	134	169	187	166

(2) Department of Environment (v)

	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91 (Forecast)
a. Number of new building projects			2	1	3
b. Amount spent on new buildings including renovation (£ million)			4	3	2
c. Amount spent on repairs and maintenance (£ million)	20	23	27	28	29

Notes:

(i) a new building "project" is any construction costing more than £150,000 which is not wholly maintenance;
(ii) number of projects in construction at 30 September each year; most projects span several years and therefore appear more than once;
(iii) in 1988 occupying departments became responsible for funding new building projects in specialised buildings and single occupations;
(iv) in 1990 occupying departments took on substantial responsibility for funding maintenance work. 1990-91 figures include fees in addition to works costs;
(v) excludes PSA's own occupation but includes Property Holdings, Building Research Establishment and the occupied and unoccupied royal palaces.

WALES

Private Streets

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will consider means by which assistance from public funds could be provided for those people no longer benefiting from a related rate reduction to contribute to the frontagers' costs of making up private streets to a satisfactory standard.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. The apportionment of costs incurred in making up private streets to a satisfactory standard is a matter for the individuals and local authority concerned.

Pembrokeshire Health Authority

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that consultations with the public and with national health service staff in Pembrokeshire regarding the proposed national health service trust shall be carried out objectively and independently of the health authority.

Mr. David Hunt: A decision on whether to approve a formal application for NHS trust status is subject to a statutory three-month public consultation period. In Wales this will be undertaken by the Welsh Office.

Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the dates and reference numbers of any circulars and other publications issued by his Department in respect of alcohol abuse since November 1980.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The following circulars on alcohol misuse have been issued since November 1980:

WOC 8/89; WHC 89(14) Alcohol Misuse—20 February 1989

WHC 90(78) Central Funding Initiative to Combat Alcohol Misuse in Wales: 1990-91 and 1991-92—5

WHC 90(79) Combating Alcohol Misuse in Wales: The Next Steps—5 December 1990

The main publications sponsored and/or distributed by the Department are as follows:

"Dealing with Alcohol Problems in Wales"—Health Education Advisory Committee for Wales, January 1987.
"Improving Services for Problem Drinkers in Wales"—Alcohol Concern Wales, 1988.
"Alcohol in the Workplace, A Guide for Employers"—Department of Employment—issued in Wales 29 November 1989.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a breakdown by counties in Wales of the distribution of funds out of the funding for projects to help combat alcohol abuse announced by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary at his Department on Drinkwise Day in June; and if he will list the organisations receiving cash in each county.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Allocations have not yet been made. However, bids have been invited by 31 December 1990 and I hope to make an announcement early in the new year.

Drug Misuse Patients

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish statistics for each Welsh health authority, for the number of drug misuse patients in Wales who receive treatment outside their district health authority areas.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not held centrally.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements have been made for giving directives to ensure that district health authority meetings will be open to the press and public.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett Health authorities are subject to the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960. This requires a considerable degree of openness in their affairs. Advice was recently issued to health authorities on this matter; this was contained in section 11 of Welsh health circular (90)57, copies of which I have placed in the Library of the House.

Homelessness

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are classed as homeless in (a) Ynys Môn and (b) Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The number of persons accepted as homeless during the September 1990 quarter is shown in the following table:

	Number
Ynys Môn	35
Wales	5,337

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the specific Welsh Office responsibilities (a) to which he will give personal oversight and (b) which he will delegate to each of his ministerial colleagues at the Welsh Office.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today announced the allocation of ministerial responsibilities within the Welsh Office. They are:

Secretary of State, the right hon. David Hunt, MBE, MP: overall responsibility for the whole Department taking a special interest in economic matters, agriculture, fisheries and forestry, industry, Welsh Development Agency and Development Board for Rural Wales, energy and environment policy, Cardiff bay, Programme for the Valleys, financial and revenue support grant issues, European Community issues, constitutional issues, training and enterprise councils.

Minister of State, Sir Wyn Roberts, MP: education and training, small businesses and rural affairs, Wales tourist board and tourism generally, transport and highways, Welsh language, arts, National Library and National Museum of Wales, historic buildings and ancient monuments, Countryside Council for Wales, national parks, conservation, general issues relating to public appointments.

Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Mr. Nicholas Bennett, MP: health and social work, housing, water and environmental protection, local government, land use planning, urban affairs, including urban programme and urban development grants, enterprise zones, sport.

Tai Cymru

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what resources are to be made available to Tai Cymru in the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. David Hunt: In gross terms the resources available to Tai Cymru will be over £117·4 million. Taking account of associated private sector funding, the overall programme will be worth above £150 million next year. I am delighted that this will secure a further tranche of over 3,000 unit completions in 1991-92.

The package of resources to be made available to Housing for Wales over the four-year period to 1993-94 will now total nearly half a billion pounds. The total allocation of over £480 million means a 36 per cent. increase from 1990-91 to 1993-94; by when the allocation will have virtually trebled in cash terms from five years ago.

I am glad that Tai Cymru continues to make good progress in achieving strategic development of housing associations in Wales: by the close of its third full year of operation, and taking account of the provision that I have been able to make this year, Tai Cymru should have increased housing association dwelling stock by over a third.

As regards current expenditure, I shall be making available £4·8 million in 1991-92—an increase of £3 million over 1990-91—to cover the costs of the special needs management allowance scheme introduced in Wales this year. The scheme is of particular significance in carrying forward our strategies for vulnerable groups in Wales. I intend that its impact should be kept under continuing review.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the level at which domestic rates in Wales would have to be fixed in 1990-91 in order to raise the same amount as under the community charge.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1990, c. 148]: Owing to a typing error an incorrect figure was given. The correct answer is as follows. The estimated average rate bill per ratepayer for Wales in 1990-91 is £430 or 31 per cent. over 1989-90. For a detailed breakdown for each local authority, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) on 11 May 1990.

EMPLOYMENT

Sheltered Placement Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning the level of funding for the sheltered placement scheme.

Mr. Jackson: Around 130 written representations have been received on this subject this year.

Local Office Closure, Northumberland

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why he proposes to close his Department's jobcentre and benefit office in Amble, Northumberland.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service Executive Agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Training

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will examine the roles of further education colleges, some sixth forms, and youth training providers to identify and discourage any duplication or waste in staff, premises, equipment and operational costs.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils are being given new responsibilities for business education partnerships and work related further education and will be closely involved in TVEI planning. The councils are well placed to address questions of efficiency and resource allocation, in partnership with local education authorities and independent educational institutions.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take frequent soundings of existing partners in education and training to ensure training and enterprise councils have the best available information on current and developing positions, and to give confidence to companies, schools, careers and managing agents that changes will be negotiated and not imposed.

Mr. Jackson: My Department is in regular contact with education and training interests and their views are always taken into account. In addition, I expect training and enterprise councils to consult relevant organisations in their local area.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what incentives he intends to offer to encourage smaller companies to support human resource development through jobs with training.

Mr. Forth: The Government are committed to encouraging all firms, including small ones, to invest more effectively in the skills which their businesses need. This commitment is fully reflected in the prominence given to this issue in the strategic guidance for training and enterprise councils (TECs). The TECs are responding with plans for a wide range of activities and incentives to support this objective, all of which are tailored to meet particular local circumstances.

Training and enterprise councils and the national training task force are also introducing a new initiative, "Investors in People", which is designed to encourage all companies, including smaller ones, to appreciate the business benefits of effective training. Effective training and development will be formally recognised as "Investors In People". This will be important to customers and potential employees.

New Businesses

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the latest weekly figures for net new business registrations.

Mr. Forth: During 1989, the latest period for which figures have been published by my Department, the number of businesses registered for VAT increased by nearly 1,700 a week on average. Early indications from data collected by HM Customs and Excise is that there continues to be a substantial surplus of registrations over deregistrations.

Labour and Social Affairs Council

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Labour and Social Affairs Council meeting held in Brussels on 26 November.

Mr. Howard: The Government welcome the result of this Council.

The Council formally adopted the health and safety directive on biological agents, and reached a common position on a directive to control the use of asbestos at the workplace. A decision on an action programme in favour of the elderly was agreed as was a resolution on the comparability of vocational training qualifications.

There was a lengthy discussion of the directives concerning part-time and temporary work, as proposed by the European Commission under its social action programme. A clear majority of member states had significant difficulties with the substance of the proposals; and they also agreed that article 100A of the treaty, as proposed by the Commission, was an inappropriate treaty base and that directives of this kind required unanimity in the Council.

A large majority of the delegations agreed with the United Kingdom that rapid progress could now be made towards agreeing the proposed directive on the health and safety of temporary workers.

There was also discussion of regulations concerned with the free movement of labour and social security entitlements for migrant workers. Some of the other member states had difficulties with the current draft texts.

The Council was given a progress report by the presidency on the social action programme as a whole, and the Commission gave a report on immigration and the Community.

The Commissioner of Social Affairs introduced her report on implementation of existing EC social legislation throughout the Community. It indicates that the United Kingdom leads all other member states; indeed, we are the only member state to have implemented all the Community directives in the social affairs field.

Overall, the United Kingdom was pleased to be able to agree to a number of sensible, well-prepared proposals in the areas of health and safety at work, training and improvements to the labour market. The Government will continue to oppose vigorously any EC legislation which would damage either job prospects in the United Kingdom and the rest of the Community or the competitiveness of our industries.

This Social Affairs Council was a further example of how the rest of the Community often shares the views of the United Kingdom when they address specific proposals for legislation or action.

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 5 December 1990]: In 1989-90, the last financial year for which information is available, the annual cost to the Employment Department Group of fees and reimbursements was as follows:

	Fees	Reimbursements (£'000)
People appointed to:
Public bodies	307	91
Non-governmental bodies	9,315	834
Other bodies	—	—

This reply does not include information on the former Training Agency, now absorbed into the Department, which could only be supplied at disproportionate cost.

ENERGY

Purchasing

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the purchasing policy of his Department.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department follows the Government's policy to base all procurement of goods and services on value for money, taking into account quality (or fitness for purpose) and delivery. Goods and services are acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. My Department also observes EC and GATT requirements for Government purchasing where appropriate and encourages small firms to compete for its business.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what were the 10 worst purchases made by his Department in the month of October as measured against the Government's supply index;

(2) what were his Department's (a) best and (b) worst purchases made in the current month as measured against the Government's supply index.

Mr. Wakeham: This information is not available because my Department does not currently subscribe to the Government supply index (GSI). It spends only a comparatively small amount on items covered by the index so that membership would not represent good value for money.

Administrative Costs

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the administrative costs of his Department rose by more or less than the retail prices index in the last financial year.

Mr. Wakeham: Gross running costs expenditure on my Department's administration was 37·2 per cent. higher in 1989-90 than in the previous year. During the same period the retail prices index increased by 7·8 per cent. The increase was mainly due to two factors. First, the Department was charged the full market rent by the then Property Services Agency for its new headquarters building, although the actual rent paid by the PSA, and hence the real annual cost to the taxpayer, was substantially less. Secondly, the Department needed to increase its staff to prepare for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry in England and Wales and to strengthen resources devoted to offshore safety.

Connection Charges

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has had from the house building industry regarding assurances on the future level of electricity connection charges post-privatisation.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: About half a dozen letters have been received from the building industry on this subject.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the directors general of Ofgas and OFFER regarding the rate of increase in connection charges for gas and electricity for new house building.

Mr. Wakeham: None. The reasonableness of gas and electricity connection charges is a matter for the respective directors general.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the 75 renewable-sourced projects covered by the first order of renewables under the non-fossil fuel obligation giving the location, type of generator and capacity in megawatts in each case and identifying those projects which would have proceeded without benefit of the above market price available under the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Mr. Wakeham: Following is a list of the 75 projects citing location and technology. Some of the generators concerned have not given approval for the capacity of their projects to be published, and I am, therefore, unable to give project-specific information. The 75 projects that the RECs have concluded contracts with in fulfilment of their obligations have an aggregate installed capacity that will build up to some 170 MW. Over half the 75 projects, and over two thirds of the capacity provided by those projects, are attributable to new projects which would not have been able to go forward without the support of a NFFO contract.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Animal Experiments

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ban those animal procedures involving LD50 and Draize tests.

Mr. Leigh: In respect of cosmetics products, the United Kingdom industry has eliminated LD50 testing except where occasionally required by certain overseas countries and has eliminated Draize testing with concentrated chemicals.

Purchasing

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the purchasing policy of his Department.

Mr. Leigh: My Department is bound by the Government's policy that purchasers should base all procurement of goods and services on value for money, including quality (or fitness for purpose) and delivery against price. In accordance with that policy, goods and services are acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Under EC rules, and the GATT Government procurement agreement where appropriate, my Department is obliged to award relevant contracts in accordance with prescribed procedures aimed at avoiding discrimination on grounds of nationality.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the 10 worst purchases made by his Department in the month of October as measured against the Government's supply index.

Mr. Leigh: The Department is not a participant in the Government supply index scheme.

Administrative Costs

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the administrative costs of his Department rose by more or less than the retail prices index in the last financial year.

Mr. Leigh: Allowing for machinery of Government changes, gross running costs expenditure on Department of Trade and Industry administration was 8·7 per cent. higher in 1989-90 than in the previous year. During the same period the retail prices index increased by 7·8 per cent.

British Satellite Broadcasting

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to whether the Director General of Fair Trading is examining the total financial liability faced by United Kingdom-based manufacturers and retailers currently holding stocks of British Satellite Broadcasting reception equipment and as to whether the Director General of Fair Trading is to examine BSB's compliance with its contracts with manufacturers and retailers.

Mr. Redwood: The director general is aware of the position facing manufacturers and retailers holding stocks of British Satellite Broadcasting reception equipment and has received representations from, among others, retailers of this equipment. The commercial contracts between BSB and the manufacturers and retailers of its equipment are a matter for the parties concerned who may, if necessary, have recourse to the courts in the normal way in the event of any breach of contract. The DGFT is advising the Secretary of State on the wider issues of the merger.

Corporate Registrations

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the growth of corporate registrations.

Mr. Redwood: A total of 1,032,200 companies were registered under the Companies Acts in Great Britain between 1980 and 1989. This compares with 521,000 companies registered in the previous 10-year period. The annual series since 1980 is as follows:

Great Britain company registrations

1980	69·4
1981	72·4
1982	87·2
1983	96·2
1984	97·9
1985	104·6
1986	117·3
1987	128·0
1988	128·9
1989	130·3
[1]1990	104·6

[1] January to October.

Further information can be found in "Companies in 1989-90", a copy of which is available in the Library.

European Commission Financial Directives

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received any new proposals for directives on financial services for the European Commission in the past six months; and whether he has been notified of any forthcoming such proposals.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 5 December 1990]: There have been three main new proposals for directives on financial services from the European Commission in the last six months. In the insurance field proposals for the non-life framework directive (OJ No. C244; 28/9/90) and the insurance committee directive (Com. (90) 344—final) were submitted to the Council in September 1990. The Commission also put a proposal to the Council on 3 October for a directive on consolidated supervision of banks, replacing the consolidated supervision directive of June 1983.

I have been notified of two major forthcoming proposals on which my Department will be in the lead. In the insurance sector, a proposal for a life framework directive is expected shortly. The Commission is also expected to propose, before the end of 1992, a directive harmonising arrangements for investor compensation throughout the EC.

British Aerospace

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what contact he has had with British Aerospace plc regarding possible redundancies.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 5 December 1990]: Mr. John Weston, the managing director of British Aerospace (Military Aircraft) Ltd. has announced that about one third of the expected 5,000 job losses will be achieved by natural wastage. For other employees affected by the decision, the company has announced a series of supporting measures including job shops, retraining, relocation, self-employment start-up assistance and early release terms. No announcement has been made giving any estimate of the redundancies which will be required.

HEALTH

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds are being provided in 1990-91 specifically to help people withdraw from benzodiazepines.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1990-91, £15·5 million has been allocated to regional health authorities, which are responsible for developing local treatment services including those which offer help to people wishing to withdraw from benzodiazepines.

Agency Staff

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual cost to the national health service in the Doncaster district health service for staff who have been employed through agencies as nurses, operating department assistants, ancillary and other staff.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information derived from the 1989-90 annual accounts of the Doncaster health authority is as follows:

Expenditure on Non-National Health Service (Agency etc.) staff

Nursing	11,108
Ancillary	Nil
All other staff (including medical and dental)	184,417

Expenditure specifically on the employment of operating department assistants is not collected centrally.

For more detailed information I suggest the hon. Member contacts Mr. J. G. S. Smith, the health authority chairman.

Purchasing

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what were the 10 worst purchases made by his Department in the month of October as measured against the Government's supply index;

(2) what were his Department's (a) best and (b) worst purchases made in the current month as measured against the Government's supply index;

(3) what was his Department's best and worst purchases as measured against the hospital supply index for the current month.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department does not subscribe to the Government or hospital supply index.

Administrative Costs

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the administrative costs of his Department rose by more or less than the retail prices index in the last financial year.

Mr. Dorrell: Gross running costs expenditure on Department of Health administration was 9·0 per cent. higher in 1989-90 than the estimated expenditure in 1988-89, when the major part of the Department of Health's running costs were combined with those of the Department of Social Security in the appropriation accounts. During the same period the retail prices index increased by 7·8 per cent.

Zimovane

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the price approved by his Department for the drug Zimovane manufactured by the company Rhone Poulenc; and how much is paid for that drug in other European countries.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The United Kingdom system controls the overall profit that companies make from the sales of all relevant products to the NHS; it does not approve the price of individual medicines.

The United Kingdom price of Zimovane is £27·44 for 28 tablets. We do not hold price details for European countries generally.

Hospitals

Mr. Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a list of hospitals in England and Wales where patients and staff have been the victims of violence within the past two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. Appropriate security arrangements for the protection of both patients and staff are the responsibility of, and can best be determined by, health authorities in the light of their knowledge of their premises and the degree of access necessary for patients and visitors. We are making £20,000 available to update the National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts' security manual which is the key reference document in this area.

Mortality Rates (London)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing (a) the perinatal, (b) infant and (c) overall mortality rates by social class in the London regional health authorities in 1970, 1980 and the latest date available.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 12 November 1990]: The exact information requested is not available. The available information is shown in the tables.

DEFENCE

The Gulf

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British service men who have not attained the age of 18 years have been posted to the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Numbers of service personnel under the age of 18 currently in the Gulf are as follows:

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 5 December 1990]: The non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Ministry of Defence are listed in the booklet "Public Bodies". This gives information on overall expenditure and the level of fees paid.

In addition, the Ministry of Defence appoints annually a number of individuals on secondment to public, non-governmental and other bodies. The number of individuals seconded at the end of 1989 was as follows:

Public bodies—21
Non-governmental bodies—172
Others (Industry and Commerce)—173

The financial arrangements are agreed on an individual basis and further details could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 4 December.

Mr. Hurd: A meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council took place in Brussels on 4 December. My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office and I represented the United Kingdom.

There was a useful discussion of preparations for the intergovernmental conference on political union. The Council confirmed that the IGC would set its own agenda, and agreed that the European Council should consider the full range of options which had emerged during the preparatory discussions. The Council had an informal discussion on the financial situation of eastern European countries and the food situation in the Soviet Union. The Commission will put detailed proposals to the European Council. The Council adopted the package of transitional measures integrating the former GDR into the EC.

Ministers discussed the situation in the Gulf and reaffirmed their support for the relevant Security Council resolutions and their condemnation of the Iraqi treatment of hostages. They sent a message of support to President Menem of Argentina after the recent attempted rebellion by certain elements of the army. In a discussion of immigration issues, my hon. Friend underlined the importance for the United Kingdom, as an island, of maintaining essential checks at our ports and airports. Member states noted the need for a co-ordinated approach to this large, and growing, problem. There was a short, but inconclusive discussion on the budget for the expanded MEDIA programme.

The Commission gave a progress report on its efforts to identify new EC aid projects for the occupied territories. On behalf of the Council, the presidency had a meeting with the President of the European Parliament to discuss amendments proposed by the European Parliament to the EC regulation providing financial assistance to Jordan, Egypt and Turkey.

Gibraltar

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Gibraltar.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The treaty of Utrecht established British title to Gibraltar and it remains under British sovereignty. The same treaty also gave Spain the right of "first refusal" if Gibraltar ceased to be British. None of this is or has been in dispute between the United Kingdom and Spain.

Britain's commitment to the people of Gibraltar, enshrined in the 1969 constitution, is well known. This Government will not enter into arrangements under which the people of Gibraltar would pass under the sovereignty of another state against their freely and democratically expressed wishes. The 1969 constitution also sets out the division of powers between the elected Government of Gibraltar and the British Government. It bestows an appropriate level of self-government for domestic matters while preserving British sovereignty and reserving necessary powers to Britain. As regards Gibraltar airport, the British Government have frequently emphasised that development could not proceed against the wishes of the Gibraltar Government and people.

The British Government are fully committed to the negotiating process with Spain (the Brussels process) aimed at overcoming all the differences between the British and Spanish Governments over Gibraltar. It covers the question of sovereignty, as well as mutually beneficial co-operation. Spanish sovereignty over Gibraltar would be possible only if acceptable to the Gibraltarians. Under the treaty of Utrecht independence is not an option, unless Spain is prepared to agree.

The Government are actively seeking to improve relations between Gibraltar and Spain and, as a significant aspect of this, working for increasingly close local co-operation which will be beneficial for the whole region. This would be in full accordance with the spirit of the CSCE, and of developments in the European Community of which Gibraltar is part. Such co-operation can flourish only on the basis of mutual confidence. We hope that all parties will act in a way that builds trust and leads to progress.

Third-world Debt

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the amount of provisions against third-world debts set aside by commercial banks on which tax relief was allowed in the latest year for which figures were available; and what was the total tax relief allowed.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

The reduction in mainstream corporation tax receipts for 1989-90 is estimated at £$\frac{1}{3}$ billion. The corresponding provisions allowable for tax relief amount to about £1 billion.

SCOTLAND

Educational Psychologists

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what figures he has on (a) the total numbers of children referred by their schools to see educational psychologists and (b) those currently waiting to do so.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the actual and the recommended numbers of educational psychologists in each local education authority.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The full-time equivalent number of educational psychologists employed in regional and islands psychological services in Scotland as at September 1989 was:

	Number
Borders	4·0
Central	20·0
Dumfries and Galloway	10·0
Fife	22·0
Grampian	26·0
Highland	13·0
Lothian	33·4
Strathclyde	160·5
Tayside	23·5
Orkney	2·0
Shetland	2·0
Western Isles	2·0
Scotland	318·4
Strathclyde Divisions
Argyll and Bute	4·0
Ayr	23·0
Dumbarton	20·0
Glasgow	50·0
Lanark	41·0
Renfrew	22·5

Source: School Census return SC6.

It is for education authorities themselves to determine the number of educational psychologists they require to assist them in carrying out their functions.

MFV Antares

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will hold a fatal accident inquiry into the recent sinking of the MFV Antares with the loss of her four-man crew.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The procurator fiscal at Kilmarnock is investigating the circumstances of the loss of this vessel and will report to Crown counsel. A fatal accident inquiry is mandatory in any case involving a death resulting from an accident in the course of employment.

Deaf-blind Children

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many deaf-blind children are currently enrolled in primary and secondary schools; what provisions have been made for them; and what plans for improvement are to be implemented in the near future.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not held centrally.

Disabled Pupils

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children confined to wheelchairs are currently enrolled in primary and secondary schools; and what information he has on the number unable to be offered places due to lack of funds or facilities.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not held centrally.

Transport Expenditure

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase transport expenditure in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has made provision in 1991-92 totalling £375 million for expenditure on roads and transport by central Government and for capital expenditure by local authorities. Although expenditure provision in 1991-92 will be lower than in 1990-91 it has risen substantially in recent years.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Industry

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the state of the agricultural industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 29 November at column 1008.

Dairy Industry

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the present state of the dairy industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: In 1988-89 dairy farming was the most profitable sector of agriculture in the United Kingdom. More recently dairy incomes have been under pressure as a result of rising costs at a time of lower prices for calves and static milk prices. The problems of structural surplus are again apparent and it is clear that the Community milk regime needs to give greater weight to market forces. Furthermore, I remain of the view that both United Kingdom dairy farmers and the dairy industry generally would benefit from a move away from the present statutory milk marketing arrangements towards a more competitive system.

Sea Fish Industry Authority

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report the names of the chairman and executive members of the Sea Fish Industry Authority, their terms of office, remuneration and from whence they were recruited for these posts.

Mr. Curry: The chairman and other members of the authority were appointed on 1 October 1990 and the deputy chairman on 1 December. Appointments are normally for a three-year period, but Ministers may, under certain circumstances, terminate an appointment at any time during that three-year period.

The board comprises 12 members appointed by Ministers. The chairman and deputy chairman and two other members are independent members who have no direct financial or commercial interest in the fishing industry. The other members are drawn from various sectors of the fishing and fish processing industry and the industry is consulted on their appointments. These members represent the industry as a whole rather than their own particular sector. The chairman receives £25,490 and the deputy chairman £11,909 and the other board members £5,330 per annum for their services.

Names of the authority's board members and their position are given in the table. Further biographical details were given in the MAFF news releases 296/90 of 30 August, 321/90 of 25 September and 385/90 of 4 December, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Beef

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the local authorities which currently have a ban on eating beef in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not available. All local authorities have been advised of the chief medical officer's view that British beef can be eaten safely by everyone. The Agriculture Committee's report on BSE endorsed this view.

Fishing Boats

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to take action to control the use of tributyltin used by fishing boats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The use, sale, supply, advertisement or storage of tributyltin (TBT) paint for use on vessels under 25 m or on fish and shellfish farming equipment was made an offence under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 as from 1 July 1987. This ban covers more than 98 per cent. of the United Kingdom fishing fleet. The United Kingdom is playing a leading role in international discussions of the need for further controls to limit TBT contamination from, for example, dry dock operations and larger vessels.

Waste Disposal

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next intends to publish his annual report on the disposal of waste at sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: A report on the licensing of waste disposal at sea in 1988 and 1989, together with results of the Ministry's monitoring of the marine environment in those years is being finalised for publication. It is expected to be published in March 1991.

Poultry Flocks (Salmonella)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on compensation for salmonella-infected poultry flocks.

Mr. Gummer: I have considered carefully the outcome of a recent arbitration case in which the National Farmers Union, on behalf of 11 flock owners, disputed the amount of compensation paid for poultry flocks which had been compulsorily slaughtered. The arbitrator decided that the payments to the flock owners concerned should be increased. This will be done, in accordance with the terms laid down by the arbitrator.

I have also decided to alter the compensation arrangements for all other producers who have received, or will receive, compensation after the date of the arbitrator's award on 25 September. With effect from that date compensation will be calculated on the basis of the full value of the number of birds in the flock, other than the estimated number of diseased birds for which there is no requirement for the payment of compensation under the Animal Health Act 1981. The number of diseased birds will be calculated on the basis of the level of infection in the flock estimated from the examination of samples. The precise method of calculating compensation on this basis will be discussed with industry organisations. The new arrangements are expected in most cases to result in a significant increase in the amount of compensation paid to flock owners.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance is given to his Department's officers to decide an appropriate level of remuneration for part-time work undertaken by those claiming income support.

Miss Widdecombe: The chief adjudication officer is responsible for providing guidance to the Department's adjudication officers, who decide all questions relating to entitlement to income support. Normally, a claimant's gross part-time earnings, less any appropriate deductions, are used when calculating how much benefit can be paid. In a small number of cases, however, earnings are assumed where a person receives no earnings for the work done, or less earnings than is paid for comparable work in the locality. But this rule does not apply to charitable or voluntary work, or where there is evidence that the employer cannot afford to pay higher wages. Adjudication officers are advised, therefore, to consider the nature of the employment, and to compare the rate of pay with that for similar work in the area and any evidence provided by the job centre. The detailed guidance is contained in the adjudication officer's guide, paragraphs 29,251 to 29,400, a copy of which is in the Library.

Child Benefit

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the recently announced increase in child benefit for the only, elder or eldest child in the family is to be made an overlapping benefit in respect of the contributory benefit child dependency increase.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the former Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 16 November. I can confirm that the adjustment to which my hon. Friend referred will be provided for by means of an amendment to the Social Security (Overlapping Benefits) Regulations 1979.

Elderly People (Carers)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the number of (a) women, (b) men and (c) families engaged in full-time unpaid work caring for physically or mentally handicapped elderly persons in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. In September 1990 there were approximately 130,000 people receiving invalid care allowance, of whom 82 per cent. were women. A recipient of this benefit must provide at least 35 hours care per week to a severely disabled person who receives attendance allowance or constant attendance allowance.

The 1985 general household survey identified 1·4 million people who devoted at least 20 hours each week to caring.

Pensions

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of allowing men and women to retire at 60 years on 80 per cent. of the national average wage.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The cost of providing state retirement pensions to men and women at age 60 has been estimated at £3 billion a year at 1985-86 prices.

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of paying pensioners £100 per week over the present rates.

Miss Widdecombe: The cost of increasing the state retirement pension by this amount would be approximately £45·5 billion per year.

Administrative Costs

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the administrative costs of his Department rose by more or less than the retail price index in the last financial year.

Miss Widdecombe: Overall, the administrative costs of the Department increased by more than the retail prices index in 1989-90. This figure includes a large capital investment programme in respect of the computerisation of the benefits system, which will produce substantial savings in later years. If this element is excluded, the administrative costs rose by slightly less than the retail prices index.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the ratio between the pensions of single people and couples; and when it was last reviewed.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no basic retirement pension rate for married couples as such. The full category A pension for a single person stands currently at £46·90. A married man on this rate of pension can claim an adult dependency increase (ADI) of £28·20 for a wife under 60 years of age; a wife over pensionable age could receive a category BL pension in her own right at the same rate, based on her husband's contributions. Since 1973, both the ADI and the category BL pension have been uprated in line with the single category A pension. This has meant that the ratio of the ADI or category BL to the single category A retirement pension has remained at about 60 per cent. since 1973.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the reasons for his decision to reduce the level of specific grant assistance to direct housing benefit and community charge benefit from 1991-92 for the district councils in the counties of Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Hampshire and the Isle of Wight.

Miss Widdecombe: The reduction in the rate of direct benefit subsidy from 97 per cent. to 95 per cent. which will apply to all authorities in Great Britain, is a modest adjustment in the balance between direct and indirect subsidy, designed to promote economy and efficiency in the handling of public funds.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many awards of attendance allowance were for periods of (a) two years, (b) one year, (c) nine months, (d) six months, and (e) any other period of less than three years, in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the precise form requested. Such information as is available is in the table. I understand that it is not the normal practice for the attendance allowance board to issue certificates to new beneficiaries for less than a year. The vast majority of short period certificates are issued on occasions when we need to ensure that there is no break of entitlement on renewal claims or during the processing of a review.

Awards made during period 1 October 1989 to 30 September 1990

	Lower rate	Higher rate	Total
Under 1 year	228	138	366
1 to 2 years	11,942	7,536	19,478
2 to 3 years	9,641	5,777	15,418
Total under 3 years	21,811	13,451	35,262

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his estimate of the cost of the reduction of the five-year age limit for the mobility component of disability living allowance to (a) three years and (b) two years; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his estimate of the cost of abolition of the five-year age limit for the mobility component of disability living allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The number of potential beneficiaries from a reduction in the lower age limit for the mobility component cannot be predicted with any great degree of certainty. Our best estimate, however, based on analyses of the OPCS disability surveys is that the abolition of the age limit would cost about £35 million a year; a reduction in the age limit to three years would cost about £25 million and a reduction to two years about £30 million.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of reduction of the three-month waiting period for disability living allowance to (a) two months and (b) one month; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The costs would be (a) about £35 million a year and (b) about £65 million a year.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of abolition of the three-month waiting period for disability living allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The cost would be about £100 million a year.

Benefit Values

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give the cash level of benefits in November 1979 and April 1991, and the real-terms change in the value using the change in the retail price index or Rossi index, as appropriate, between November 1979 and September 1990, using November 1979 as 100 for (i) retirement pension, (ii) unemployment benefit, (iii) sickness benefit, (iv) industrial disablement benefit, (v) industrial death benefit, (vi) maternity allowance, (vii) war disablement pension, (viii) war widows pension, (ix) attendance allowance, (x) invalid care allowance, (xi) severe disablement allowance, (xii) child benefit for first and second and subsequent children separately and (xiii) one parent benefit giving, where appropriate, the single and couple and higher and lower rate separately;

(2) if he will give the cash level of benefits in November 1979 and April 1991, and the real-terms change in the value using the change in the index for average gross weekly earnings, all full-time workers on adult rates in all industries and services, excluding those whose pay was affected by absence between November 1979 and September 1990, using November 1979 as 100 for (i) retirement pension, (ii) unemployment benefit, (iii) sickness benefit, (iv) industrial disablement benefit, (v) industrial death benefit, (vi) maternity allowance, (vii) war disablement pension, (viii) war widows pension, (ix) attendance allowance, (x) invalid care allowance, (xi) severe disablement allowance, (xii) child benefit for first and second and subsequent children separately and (xiii) one parent benefit giving, where appropriate, the single and couple and higher and lower rate separately.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not yet possible to calculate the "real-terms" change in the value of benefits that are due for payment in April 1991, and it would not be meaningful to make calculations to average benefit rates over a particular period on the basis of movements in prices over a different period. Nor is it meaningful to calculate a "real-terms change" by reference to an index of earnings.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Speech Therapy

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the annual cost incurred through purchasing special speech therapy services etc. for Northern Ireland children provided outside the United Kingdom in each of the last five years;

(2) how many children required special speech therapy which has to be obtained outside Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not held centrally, but I understand that such referrals as do occur are extremely rare.

Chernobyl Accident

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the areas, and the size of each of those areas in acres, together with the number of sheep affected, which are still under restrictions arising from the nuclear accident at Chernobyl in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and indicate the percentage fall of radioactivity in (a) the peat, (b) the vegetation and (c) the sheep, since the accident occurred; and when he now expects to be able to remove restrictions on the movement of sheep in those areas.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 4 December 1990]: Restrictions on movement and slaughter of sheep in Northern Ireland apply in the following areas:

	Glenshane County Londonderry	Belraugh County Londonderry	Glenwherry County Antrim
Acreage	10,744	2,247	8,620
Estimated number of breeding sheep	11,300	3,000	7,000

Monitoring of radioactivity levels in survey flocks has demonstrated no significant fall in radioactivity levels.

The available research data from sampling of vegetation and soil/peat does not allow firm conclusions to be reached.

It is not possible to predict how long restrictions will need to stay in force. They will be lifted as soon as it is possible to do so without compromising the safety of the food chain.

Chernobyl Accident

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what investigations have been carried out to determine the effect of the Chernobyl accident on those rivers in Northern Ireland which drain the areas affected by the accident; if any rise in radioactivity has been observed in the waters of those rivers and streams during (a) drought conditions and (b) flood conditions; whether any rise in radioactivity has been observed in the flesh of (i) trout, (ii) coarse fish, (iii) salmon or sea trout and (iv) smelts of salmon or sea trout; and if there has been any attempt to discover whether the spawn of such fish has been affected.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 4 December 1990]: Radioactivity levels in Northern Ireland waters and in fish following the Chernobyl incident were low and have since declined to very low levels. These levels would have no impact on fish populations. The specific investigations referred to have not therefore been considered necessary.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what investigations have been carried out into the effect on (a) hares and rabbits, (b) red grouse, snipe pheasant and woodcock, (c) rooks and jackdaws, (d) grey crows, ravens, magpies and buzzards and (e) falcons and hawks, of the nuclear accident at Chernobyl in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and if he will indicate the amount of radioactivity present in the flesh of the various species as a result of that accident in those areas of Northern Ireland affected by that accident.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 4 December 1990]: Monitoring of the levels of radioactivity in wild species subsequent to the Chernobyl incident was discontinued when levels were found to be well below the control limit of 1,000 bq/kg.

Social Fund

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show for each year since the present system came into operation and the current year to date how many times the social fund commissioner has referred appeals back to the local office and in how many of such cases of referral in each year the local office refused to pay.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 4 December 1990]: The readily available information is as follows:

	Social Fund Review Applications
	1988-89	1989-90	[2]1990
Cases referred back by Social Fund Inspectors to Social Fund Officers for redetermination	81	595	395

Loans and Grants

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show for each Department of Health and Social Services office in Northern Ireland what sums were available for (a) crisis loans, (b) budgeting loans and (c) community care grants in each year since the system was introduced and the current year to the latest available date; how much was expended in each area in each year; and what was the percentage under or overspent in each area and year.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 4 December 1990]: The information is not available in the precise format requested as in the allocation of resources for loans from the social fund no distinction is made between crisis and budgeting loans. Otherwise the details for each office are shown in the following tables:

Social Security Office	Loans			Community care grants

HOME DEPARTMENT

Broadcasting

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek a meeting with the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority and the shadow ITC to discuss the case for assurances from British Satellite Broadcasting, British Sky Broadcasting and News International about the expeditious honouring of contractual commitments of British Satellite Broadcasting to its customers, manufacturers and retailers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. It would not be right for Ministers to become involved in contractual issues of this kind which must be for the parties concerned to pursue direct with the new company.

Police Firearms

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many operations firearms were issued to police officers in England and Wales for the years 1983 to the present; in how many of those operations shots were fired by police officers; how many police officers are currently qualified to carry firearms; and what were the equivalent figures for each of the previous seven years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information relating to the police use of firearms in operations against criminals or others known or believed to be armed is given in the following table.

Year	Number of authorised firearms officers	Number of operations	Number of occasions when shots fired
1983	13,044	3,180	3
1984	11,873	2,667	6
1985	10,244	2,488	7
1986	8,395	2,453	1

Year	Number of authorised firearms officers	Number of operations	Number of occasions when shots fired
1987	7,349	2,185	7
1989	7,311	2,583	4

Despite a small increase in 1989, the trend over the period shows a significant reduction in the number of authorised firearms officers. The decrease reflects the emphasis placed by chief officers on having highly trained firearms officers in numbers no greater than is operationally necessary.

Purchasing

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the purchasing policy of his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Department follows the Government's policy that purchasers should base all procurement of goods and services on value for money, including quality, or fitness for purpose and delivery against price. In accordance with that policy, goods and services are acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Under EC rules, and the GATT Government agreement (GPA) where appropriate, my Department is obliged to award relevant contracts in accordance with the prescribed procedures aimed at avoiding discrimination on the grounds of nationality.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what were the 10 worst purchases made by his Department in the month of October as measured against the Government's supply index;

(2) what were his Department's (a) best and (b) worst purchases made in the current month as compared with the Government's supply index.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Information on my Department's best and worst purchases made in the current month as compared with the Governments supply index is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Administrative Costs

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the administrative costs of his Department rose by more or less than the retail price index in the last financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Gross running costs expenditure on Home Office administration was 10.3 per cent. higher in 1989-90 than in the previous year. During the same period the retail prices index increased by 7·8 per cent.

Political Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names and salaries of each political adviser working in his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Mr. Tony Kerpel. It is not the practice to disclose the salaries of special advisers as they are negotiated individually in relation to previous outside earnings and are therefore confidential.

Derbyshire Constabulary

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish the report of Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary on Derbyshire constabulary.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The report has been published today and copies have been placed in the Library.

Distress Warrants

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on 22 November 1990 Official Report, column 175, on distress warrants, if he will classify by type the numbers of distress warrants issued in each of the last three years; and how many of these led to property seizure and sale.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 3 December 1990]: Information on the number of distress warrants is obtained from the magistrates courts' management information system, and the only breakdown available is as follows:

Distress warrants issued in respect of arrears on:

	Fine and Fee accounts	Maintenance accounts
1987	185,000	200
1988	560,000	600
1989	587,000	2,800

Information is not available on the action occurring after the issue of a warrant.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Angola

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government plan to make available further humanitarian assistance to Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: I very much welcome the agreement of all parties in Angola to the United Nations special relief programme. I have this week approved a further £500,000 of relief assistance for the victims of drought and civil war in Angola. This is in addition to our earlier agreement to help meet the cost of a team of United Nations relief co-ordinators and brings the total of our relief assistance to Angola to £1·5 million since September last year.

NATIONAL ASSISTANCE

Inflation

14. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he intends to start publishing the rate of inflation excluding mortgage interest rates and the poll tax in the retail prices index press release.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. Data for the retail prices index excluding mortgage interest payments and the community charge are available upon request from the Central Statistical Office press office.

19. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of inflation; and what are the predictions for the next 12 months.

Mr. Maples: The all-items retail prices index inflation rate was 10·9 per cent. in October. The autumn statement forecast is for a sharp fall to 5½ per cent. by the fourth quarter of next year.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average rate of inflation from 1979 to the latest convenient date; and what was the comparable figure for the preceding five years.

Mr. Maples: Between October 1979 and October 1990, the latest available date, the retail prices index increased by an average of 7·3 per cent. per annum. The corresponding average annual increase between October 1974 and October 1979 was 15·8 per cent.

Inflation (European Community Countries)

15. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many countries in the European Community have a higher rate of inflation than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maples: Two.

Privatisation

16. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total gross costs to the Exchequer associated with the privatisation programme have been to date.

Mr. Norman Lamont: £1 billion has been paid in fees and other costs to privatisation advisers and contractors.

Interest Rates

17. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Confederation of British Industry on the current level of interest rates.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My right hon. Friend has seen the CBI's latest economic situation report.

22. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Bank base rates are 14 per cent.

Departmental (Expenditure)

18. Dr. Reid: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Departments are planned to have less money in real terms in 1993-94 than they spent in 1990-91 on estimated outturns.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Gentleman to table 1A.10 of the 1990 autumn statement.

Taxes and National Insurance

20. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage of gross income paid in total taxation including national insurance by a married couple with one earner and two children on average wages and treating child benefit as negative income tax in 1978-79 and 1989-90.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Approximately 35 per cent. and 36 per cent. respectively. Over the same period, measured at 1990 prices, the same family has enjoyed an increase in real net income of over £58 per week, compared with a rise of less than £1·40 under the last Labour Government.

25. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of non-oil gross domestic product non-oil taxes and national insurance contributions represented in (a) 1978-79 and (b) 1989-90.

Mr. Maples: In 1978-79 it was 34¾ per cent. and 37¼ per cent. in 1989-90.

Child Benefit

21. Mr. Watson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of the Trades Union Congress to discuss child benefit.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have not met representatives of the Trades Union Congress to discuss child benefit.

Growth Forecast

23. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Confederation of British Industry about his forecast for growth in 1991.

Mr. Mellor: None, but I have seen the Confederation of British Industry's latest economic situation report.

Charities

24. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the future status of charities with regard to liability for value added tax.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My ministerial colleagues and I receive numerous representations about the future VAT position of charities. We make it clear in reply that we are committed to securing the right conditions for charitable activity to flourish, both now and in the single market after 1992.

Public Spending

26. Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Confederation of British Industry about the public spending total for 1992-93.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend receives representations from the Confederation of British Industry from time to time on a variety of economic matters, but none has specifically addressed the public spending total for 1992-93.

European Central Bank

27. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response he has made to the report of the EC committee of central bank governors concerning a European central bank.

Mr. Norman Lamont: As the hon. Member knows, the work of the central bank governors was to establish what the arrangements might be if Governments decide that there should be such a bank. The Governor of the Bank of England has placed clearly on record the fundamental reservations of the United Kingdom authorities—that is, the Government and the bank—about a single currency and a single monetary authority.

Income Tax

28. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the percentage of personal income taken by income tax in 1979 and 1990.

Mr. Maples: The percentage of personal income taken by income tax has fallen from 20 per cent. in 1978-79 to 17 per cent. in 1990-91.

Oil Prices

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment has been made of the implications for monetary and budgetary policy of the increase in oil prices caused by the continuing crisis in the Gulf.

Mr. Mellor: Tight monetary and fiscal policies are required to ensure that the effect of higher oil prices on inflation is not accommodated.

Business Expansion Scheme (Housing)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated cost to the Exchequer of each unit of accommodation under the business expansion scheme for housing.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 5 December 1990]: The cost per unit of accommodation of BES tax relief on residential property in 1988-89 is provisionally estimated as about £20,000. Information for 1989-90 is not yet available.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the results of research on the demographic and economic impacts of AIDS in developing countries are now available; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Overseas Development Administration is funding two research projects on this topic, both based in Africa. They are "Analysis of the Demographic and Economic Impact of Aids in the Developing World" by Professor R. M. Anderson of Imperial College and "Community Coping Mechanisms in the face of exceptional Demographic Change" by Dr. Barnett and Professor Blaikie of university of East Anglia with Dr. Obbo. The results are expected to be published during 1991, but may not be conclusive.

NORTHERN IRELAND

School Meals

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many students attending colleges of further education, in each year since 1985, were in receipt of free school meals until they reached their 18th birthday, and were subsequently required to pay for school meals; and if he will take measures to ensure that all students, who otherwise qualify for free school meals, will not be disqualified on grounds of age.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of students in receipt of free school meals for the years 1985 to 1989 was as follows:

	Number
1985	1,300
1986	1,507
1987	1,958
1989	1,026

Information is not held about the number of such students who re-enrolled in the institutions in the following years and were required to pay for their meals. There are no plans to change the existing arrangements which give parity of treatment with pupils attending secondary schools.

Disabled People

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of (a) physically disabled and (b) mentally disabled people living in Northern Ireland in each year since 1985.

Mr. Hanley: The information available is given in the table. It should be noted that until 1987 information on the numbers of physically disabled, mentally handicapped and mentally ill people known to, or in contact with, the health and social services boards was collected on a calendar year basis. Since 1988-89 the information has been collected on a financial year basis and is restricted to include only persons in contact with the health and social services board during that year.

Year	Physically disabled	Mentally handicapped	Mentally ill
1985	37,895	6,630	5,038
1986	38,593	6,610	4,890
1987	40,498	6,783	5,143
1988-89	25,811	6,651	6,690

The figures for 1989-90 have not yet been submitted by the health boards.

Benefit Recipients

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals giving their normal occupation as farming, are receiving (a) income support, (b) family credit and (c) unemployment benefit at each district office of the Department of Health and Social Services in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Although precise figures are not available, it is estimated there are about 1,000 people getting family credit whose normal occupation is farming. Information about the number of such individuals receiving income support is not available and information about the numbers receiving unemployment benefit could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Pensioners

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of people, over the age of 65 years, living in Northern Ireland in each year since 1985.

Mr. Hanley: The information, taken from the mid-year estimates of population, is as follows:

	Numbers
1985	186,800
1986	188,500
1987	190,900
1988	192,300
1989	194,000

Figures for 1990 will not be available until mid-1991.

Home Help

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many individuals received home help care in each health board area in Northern Ireland in each year since 1986.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 4 December 1990]: The information requested is set out in the table:

	1986	1987	1988-89
Eastern Board	[1]13,866	[2]13,358	15,432
Northern Board	5,577	5,271	4,723
Southern Board	5,822	6,251	6,221
Western Board	4,632	4,615	4,497
NI Totals	29,897	29,495	30,873

[1] Includes estimated number for 1 Unit of Management.
[2] Includes estimated number for 3 Units of Management.

Data for 1986 and 1987 refer to recipients during year ended 31 December. Data for 1988-89 show recipients at 31 March apart from four (of the nine) units of management in the Eastern board which gave data for the calendar year 1988. Data for 1989-90 have not yet been submitted by the health boards.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Conservative Candidate, Cheltenham

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to prosecute Mr. Bill Galbraith of Cheltenham for comments he has made concerning the adoption of Mr. John Taylor as prospective Conservative candidate for Cheltenham; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Gloucestershire constabulary is conducting an investigation arising out of statements allegedly made by Mr. Galbraith. A report will in due course be submitted to the Crown prosecution service, which will consider whether to invite me to consent to the institution of proceedings for an offence under part III of the Public Order Act 1986.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

British Geological Survey

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply on 27 November, Official Report, column 374, if he will make a statement on the use to which the British Geological Survey's study of rock formation in England and Wales will be put.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The results of the systematic geological surveys of the United Kingdom carried out by the British Geological Survey are published in the form of geological maps, descriptive memoirs and reports. These have a wide range of applications including land use planning, mineral and groundwater resource assessment, engineering and geotechnical investigations and academic research.

Zidovudine

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will update the information given in the reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe on 15 December 1989, Official Report, column 832, and if he will make a further statement on the progress of the Medical Research Council/INSERM trial of Zidovudine.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Medical Research Council/INSERM trial of Zidovudine is continuing. The number of participants enrolled to date is 831 in the United Kingdom and 803 in France.

Sport

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he will take to implement the recommendations of the National Curriculum Council regarding the position of physical education and sport in the national curriculum.

Mr. Eggar: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the National Curriculum Council's advice on the curriculum for 14 to 16-year-old pupils. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 20 November 1990 at column 65.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the Government's total expenditure on sport for each of the last five years and as a total over the same period; and what measures he will take to increase Government assistance to sport over the next years.

Mr. Atkins: In England central Government's total expenditure or planned provision on sport through grant in aid to the Sports Council and the Department of the Environment's urban programme for the years 1985-86 to 1993-94 is:

	Sports Council Grant	Urban Programme
1985-86 outturn	30·1	24·7
1986-87 outturn	37·4	21·3
1987-88 outturn	37·1	25·2
1988-89 outturn	39·0	17·8
1989-90 outturn	41·9	15·5
1990-91 estimated outturn	43·7	15·7
1991-92 plans	46·7	15·9
1992-93 plans	47·4	16·0
1993-94 plans	48·8	16·1

The Government also fund sport indirectly through other inner-city programmes and agencies and provide financial support for local authorities' revenue expenditure on sport through unhypothecated revenue support grant. In the light of recent departmental changes, I am considering what further steps may be taken to improve sport in schools.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will re-examine the allocation of teachers' hours in relation to extra-curricular activities in sport and recreation.

Mr. Eggar: The allocation of teachers' directed time is a matter for head teachers to decide.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will initiate a full assessment of the needs of physical education and training colleges, with particular reference to teacher training in team sports and other sporting skills.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to initiate such an assessment. As far as the content of initial teacher training is concerned, the Government's revised criteria for the approval of courses, announced in DES circular 24/89, require training institutions to prepare students to teach PE according to the requirements of the national curriculum.

English (Second Language)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many school students are estimated to have English as their second language.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This information is not held centrally.

Teacher Appraisal

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent consultations on school teacher appraisal.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I hope to make an announcement shortly, details of which will be placed in the Library at the earliest opportunity.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Office Space

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he has any estimate of the amount of office space taken up by filing cabinets and cupboards in hon. Members' offices.

Mr. MacGregor: No. This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information Technology

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) what assistance is available to hon. Members to move towards paperless offices;

(2) what studies his office have carried out into the potential of compact disc technology to reduce paper use and the need for storage space in hon. Members' offices.

Mr. MacGregor: Assistance for Members who wish to establish computer and other information technology facilities in their offices is available in two forms. Advice on suitable equipment and procedures can be obtained from the computer officer. Advice on funding the cost of equipment from the office costs allowance is available from the Fees Office.

The Services Committee's fourth report of last Session suggests ways in which information technology services in the House might be developed and funded.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Maude: The ECOFIN Council met in Brussels on 3 December. The Minister for Corporate Affairs and I represented the United Kingdom.

Further progress was made in discussions of the investment services directive and the money laundering directive was also discussed. These directives will both return to the Council for further consideration on 17 December.

Over lunch there was a brief discussion of organisational issues in preparation for the intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union. The possibility of additional assistance for the countries of eastern Europe and the Soviet Union was also raised. This will be discussed further at a special meeting of ECOFIN to be held on 10 December.

The arrangements for VAT controls after 1992 were also discussed and I explained that our consultations with industry were not yet complete. The Council heard statements from Germany and the Commission on the fiscal aspects of road transport.

There was a short discussion of a Commission paper concerning the debt of African, Caribbean and Pacific countries accrued under previous Lomé conventions. It was agreed that this should be considered further by ECOFIN in the new year.

The Council also discussed a further report from the presidency on negotiations with the European Parliament about revisions to the financial perspective arising from German unification and the Gulf crisis.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest informal meeting of the European Community's economic and finance ministers.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Economic and Finance Ministers and central bank governors of the European Community met informally in Milan on 2 December. The Governor of the Bank of England and I represented the United Kingdom.

The meeting began with a discussion of the state of the world economy and the possible need for additional assistance for the countries of eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. The chairman of the Committee of Central Bank Governors presented the committee's draft statutes for a European system of central banks, which will be published shortly. I repeated our reserve on the imposition of a single currency and a European central bank. I emphasised, however, our hope and expectation that an agreement on economic and monetary union would be reached which would be acceptable to all members of the Community.

There was also a short discussion of the economic situation in Greece.

Treasury Accountants

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many accountants in the Treasury received pay increases in excess of 25 per cent. in the pay settlement years 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990, taken individually.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are no instances of accountants in the Treasury receiving increases in excess of 25 per cent. in respect of any of the pay settlement years 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Transaction Costs

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what methods are available to reduce transaction costs short of a single currency.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Transaction costs are most effectively reduced through increased competition, co-operation between banks in developing systems of making payments and technological change.

US Banking Crisis

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the effects for the British financial system of the banking crisis and the collapse of the savings and loans companies of the United States of America.

Mr. Maples: The Government and the Bank of England have been closely following developments in the banking and savings and loan industries in the United States. The United Kingdom banking system is well capitalised and comprehensively regulated, and the US problems, particularly of the savings and loans, are the result of circumstances peculiar to the US which have no direct equivalent here.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what ethnic monitoring his Department has carried out concerning value added tax raids.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Customs and Excise does not carry out VAT raids; it instigates investigations into VAT frauds. No monitoring of ethnic involvement is made in these investigations; each case is treated on its merits.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many value added tax raids have resulted in (a) arrests and (b) convictions in the last five years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: As stated, Customs does not carry out VAT raids. In the last five years investigations into VAT fraud resulted in (a) 348 arrests, (b) 1,070 convictions, and (c) 1,243 cases in which proceedings were compounded on payment of a penalty.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many persons are employed by the value added tax section engaged in raids on factories and offices.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Customs does not employ officers for specific types of VAT evasion. Its specialist VAT investigators undertake investigations of all types of VAT fraud.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many value added tax raids there have been in 1990, 1989, 1988, 1987 and 1986.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Again, Customs does not carry out VAT raids. The number of visits made in connection with VAT investigations where a search warrant was authorised are: 1986—figures not available, 1987—287, 1988—274, 1989—146, 1990—162.

Football

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the Government's total income from (a) the football bettings duty and (b) the football industry as a whole for each of the past 11 years and as a total over the same period.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Receipts from pool betting duty are as follows:

1979-80	136·1
1980-81	157·0
1981-82	176·0
1982-83	199·3
1983-84	204·9
1984-85	217·9
1985-86	235·2
1986-87	254·2
1987-88	277·0
1988-89	278·9
1989-90	303·8
	2,440·3

Information about the total Exchequer income from the football industry is not available.

Sporting Activities (Income)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the Government's total income from sporting activities for each of the past five years and as a total over the same period.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that this information is not available.

Building Works

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish tales showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c) the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 5 December 1990]: The information is as follows:

(a) The Treasury has not acquired any new buildings.

(b) In view of (a), nil return.

[1]1988-89	1989-90	[2]1990-91
£532,000	£371,000	£301,000

These figures are for part II and part III services delegated to Departments under property repayment services rules.

£1,211,000	£500,000	£200,000

[1] Figures for previous years for the whole of the Treasury could not be obtained except at disproportionate costs.

[2] Forecast figures.

These figures are for building renovation part I services for which the Treasury has paid from its departmental budget.

Monetary Union

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what studies have been initiated by Her Majesty's Government or by the European Community of the tangible benefits to be derived from monetary union over those expected from the completion of the single market.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 6 December 1990]: The European Commission published in October 1990 a report entitled, "One market, one money: an evaluation of the costs and benefits of forming an economic and monetary union". The Government tabled an explanatory memorandum on the report on 5 November 1990. The autumn 1990 edition of the Treasury bulletin set out the Government's proposals for the establishment of a European Monetary Fund to manage a new common currency, the "hard ecu". These measures would be a powerful force for inflation convergence at the best Community performance.

TRANSPORT

Ship Registration

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what talks he is planning to have with the General Council of British Shipping to discuss the trend in the tonnage of the ships registered in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend met the president of the General Council of British Shipping on 4 December, when a number of shipping issues were discussed.

London Underground

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will call for a report as to how many trains were cancelled through Oxford Circus on the night of 4 December;

(2) how many London Underground trains were cancelled on the night of 4 December.

Mr. Freeman: These are operational matters for London Underground Ltd.

Relief Road, Manchester

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects the public consultation to take place, in respect of the proposed Greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Mr. Chope: Spring 1991.

Transport Expenditure, Scotland

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to increase transport expenditure in Scotland in the areas of responsibility under his Department.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 6 December 1990]: Over the next three years BR plans to spend over £30 million in 1990-91 prices on infrastructure in Scotland. Scotland will also benefit from other BR investment in both infrastructure and rolling stock. In addition, the Department will issue credit approvals for £1 million for Scottish local authority ports in 1991-92.

HEALTH

NHS (Theft and Fraud)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of reported cases of theft and fraud in (a) the national health service and (b) the Norwich health authority in each year since 1979 showing (i) the total number of cases reported, (ii) the number of cases reported to police, (iii) the number of prosecutions and (iv) the number of convictions in each year.

Mr. Dorrell: Table A provides information on the number of reported cases in the category of theft, fraud, arson, neglect of duty or gross carelessness as reported by Norwich health authority for the years since its inception in 1982, and corresponding data for all health authorities in England. No separate breakdown of fraud or theft is available.

Health authorities are required to report to the Department annually all instances of alleged fraud and data are shown in table B. Norwich health authority has made no reports of fraud since the authority's inception.

Information on the number of theft cases reported to the police, prosecutions and convictions are not collected centrally by the Department.

Table A

Reported cases of loss of cash, equipment and property in stores arising from theft, fraud, arson, neglect of duty or gross carelessness in health authorities in England

Year	Number of cases
	Norwich health authority	All health authorities
1982-83	70	4,289
1983-84	85	4,181
1984-85	65	5,308
1985-86	76	5,199
1986-87	59	4,584
1987-88	37	3,840
1988-89	35	4,373
1989-90	33	4,028

Incontinence

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many elderly people he estimates are in need of incontinence aids; how many of such people are accommodated in residential nursing homes in (a) the public and (b) the private sector; and how many and what percentage of such persons in each sector receive such incontinence pads free of charge.

Mr. Dorrell: Information about the demand for and supply of incontinence pads is not held centrally.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will issue guidance to all health authorities to provide incontinence pads to residents of homes for the elderly.

Mr. Dorrell: Guidance has already been issued to district health authorities advising them, at their discretion, to provide incontinence pads to people in residential homes.

Rotherham Health Authority

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will ensure that resources are provided to meet the necessary costs of staff development within the area of the Rotherham health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: The costs of staff development are met out of normal revenue funding for health authorities. It is a matter for Trent regional health authority to allocate resources to district health authorities in that region.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Rent Arrears

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the 10 local authorities with the highest arrears as a percentage of the rent roll at the end of 1989-90;

(2) what is the actual or estimated total figure for arrears of rent outstanding to all local authorities for the year 1989-90.

Mr. Yeo: Figures for the position at the end of 1989-90 are not yet available.

An ordered table, showing cumulative rent arrears at March 1989 as a percentage of the rent roll for each English local authority, was placed in the Library on 3 April. Estimated total arrears for all English local authorities at the end of 1988-89 were £319 million.

Waste Management

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who has primary responsibility for specifying the requirements for waste management practices at incinerator plant.

Mr. Trippier: Currently operations at incinerators are governed by the conditions of site licences granted by waste disposal authorities under the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution also has responsibility under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 for the control of air pollution from all chemical incinerators, and other incinerators with capacities of over 1 tonne per hour; this control covers the whole process, including such matters as good housekeeping and training of operators. Local authority environmental health departments are responsible for the control of air emissions from other types of incinerator, under the Clean Air Acts and the statutory nuisance provisions of the Public Health Acts.

When the new system of integrated pollution control is brought into effect under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will assume full responsibility for the control of all releases to the environment, whether to air, water or land, from incinerators with a capacity of over 1 tonne per hour. Air emissions from other incinerators will be controlled by local authorities at district level; waste regulation authorities will have responsibility for all other aspects of control. Regulations detailing the interface will be laid shortly.

Air Pollution

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action local authorities are able to take to control air pollution from mobile plant; and if he will list all authorisations granted for mobile plant under the Environmental Protection Act, by local authority granting the authorisation and the contractor's principal place of business.

Mr. Trippier: Under part I of the Environmental Protection Act, the powers available to control air pollution from processes prescribed for local authority control will be the same whether the process is fixed or mobile. Mobile processes will require an authorisation; the conditions included in such authorisations must secure the objectives specified in section 7(2) of the Act, including the use of BATNEEC to prevent or minimise emissions of prescribed substances.

Part I of the Act will be brought into force from 1 April 1991. No authorisations have yet been granted.

Environment Newsletter

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his departmental library subscribes to the fortnightly newsletter, "Environment Business".

Mr. Baldry: Yes.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 (a) the amount of moneys paid to local authorities from the European regional development fund and (b) the amount which is taken into account under the additionality principle for basic credit approval purposes showing the totals for each local authority concerned and the programmes being financed.

Mr. Portillo: (a) Information on the amount of moneys paid to individual local authorities from the European regional development fund could be provided only at disproportionate cost and (b) EC grants enhance the national total available for distribution as credit approvals. In general that total is distributed to individual local authorities as basic credit approvals on the basis of their overall spending needs, without regard to whether expenditure is to be supported by EC grants. There is a limited exception for expenditure in the other services block where expected EC receipts are taken into account in distributing supplementary credit approvals.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what legislation, including statutory instruments, regarding the operation of the poll tax in 1991-92 has still to come before the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Radiation Exposure

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the estimated annual radiation dose equivalent uptakes in milliSieverts per annum by members of the public living near Bradwell and Dungeness nuclear power stations, arising from all sources of radiation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Doses to small groups of persons living close to the sites resulting from discharges to atmosphere of the radionuclide argon 41 are up to about 0·1 milliSieverts per annum. Doses from discharges via other environmental pathways are reported from time to time by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, copies of whose reports are placed in the Library of the House.

Commonhold

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has made any assessment of the number of properties that would be eligible for inclusion in a new tenure of commonhold.

Sir George Young [holding answer 5 December 1990]: No. The Building Societies Association estimates that there are up to 3,000,000 owners of leasehold flats who could be affected by commonhold legislation. We are unable to confirm that estimate, but comparison with the 1981 census count of leasehold householders suggests that it is on the high side.

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 5 December 1990]: Information about the number, and levels of remuneration, of people appointed to public bodies by my Department is given in the annual HMSO publication "Public Bodies". A copy of the current issue is held at the House of Commons Library and "Public Bodies 1990" will be published shortly. Information about reimbursements, such as travel and subsistence expenses, is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

PRIME MINISTER

The Gulf

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister what urgent steps he has taken in order to assess the (a) economic, (b) financial and (c) humane costs of an armed conflict of Arab, British and American troops with Iraq; and what information Her Majesty's Government are gathering about the economic, social and political impact of such conflict upon non-oil producer countries in the third world and those in the middle east in particular.

The Prime Minister: We are doing everything in our power to contribute to a peaceful solution to the Gulf crisis based on the full implementation of the resolutions adopted by the United Nations Security Council. It is not possible to make exact predictions of the effects of hostilities in the manner suggested, should it be necessary to use force to eject Saddam Hussein.

Latin America

Mr. Wray: To ask the Prime Minister what support her Majesty's Government are giving to the call of Finance and Economy Ministers of Latin America to start negotiations with the European Community for a free trade accord.

The Prime Minister: No formal request for this purpose has been received by the Community. If one were, it would be carefully considered. The Government would play a full part in that process.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations he has received concerning compensation for nuclear test veterans.

The Prime Minister: I have not, as far as I am aware, received any representations from nuclear test veterans. The Ministry of Defence has, however, received about 120 claims from individuals seeking compensation for damage to health allegedly due to participation in the United Kingdom's nuclear weapon test programme. In addition, a number of representations have been made by test veterans' organisations concerning compensation for their members.

India

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister if he has any plans to visit India.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans at present to visit India.

Mr. John Hall

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister, further to his answer on 4 December concerning the case of Mr. John Hall, Official Report, column 172 if he will agree to meet Mr. Hall to discuss compensation.

The Prime Minister: I understand that Mr. Hall is in receipt of a war pension. He has made no claim for compensation other than this. Should Mr. Hall pursue a claim for compensation, Government officials would be happy to discuss the matter with him.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Strategic Mineral Stockpile

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement as to what makes up the constituents, and what is the purpose, of the strategic mineral stockpile.

Mr. Leigh: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to his question about the contents of the strategic mineral stockpile on 16 November, at column 236. The stockpile was established originally as a contingency against short-term disruptions to certain industrial supplies.

Environment Newsletter

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his departmental library subscribes to the fortnightly newsletter, "Environment Business".

Mr. Leigh: Yes: The library and information service of the Department of Trade and Industry does subscribe to "Environment Business".

Legal Proceedings

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will state the nature of any legal proceedings under way, outstanding or stayed by a judge in the High Court which have been brought by his Department against either British Aerospace or Rover.

Mr. Lilley: On 10 September, HMG served writs on Rover Group and British Aerospace to secure the repayment with interest of, respectively, £1·5 million and £42·9 million which had been ruled by the Commission to be unauthorised concessions in connection with the sale of Rover Group to British Aerospace. On 29 November British Aerospace and Rover Group made a successful application to the court for a stay in these proceedings pending the outcome of their application to the European Court of Justice to annul the Commission's requirement to repay.

Unit Trusts and Life Assurance

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what decision he has reached on the report by the Director General of Fair Trading on the rules made by the Securities and Investments Board concerning disclosure of information relating to the sale of unit trusts and life assurance products.

Mr. Lilley: In April, the Director General of Fair Trading reported to my predecessor on SIB's disclosure rules, introduced during 1989, applying to the sale of unit trusts and life assurance products. The director general concluded that certain of SIB's rules are likely to restrict or distort competition to a significant extent. Under the Financial Services Act, I have to decide whether or not I agree with the director general and, if I do, whether or not the anti-competitive effect is greater than necessary for the protection of investors.

In view of the importance of this issue, my Department invited views from all interested parties to be sent to the Department by the end of September. I have taken account of these views in reaching my decision.

I have concluded that SIB's disclosure rules, as currently drafted, are likely to restrict or distort competition to a significant extent. My main reason is that I consider that the present rules do not automatically provide the investor with the information he needs, and at an early enough stage, to make an informed investment decision. It is especially difficult for an investor to make a comparison between a purchase through an independent financial adviser (IFA) and a purchase through a tied agent.

I have also concluded that the effect on competition is greater than necessary for the protection of investors.

However, I know from the responses received during the consultation period that there are very real concerns about the effects of any new rules that might replace the existing ones. I appreciate these concerns. I also agree with the director general and with SIB in attaching importance to the maintenance of a healthy IFA sector.

I am therefore asking SIB to propose changes to lessen the anti-competitive effect of the present rules but which take into account the desirability of:

- giving the consumer the comparable and timely information he needs in a form which is readily comprehensible;
- avoiding imposing unnecessarily burdensome costs on product providers; and
- ensuring that any changes to the rules on disclosure of commissions do not result in a distortion of competition between IFAs and tied agents.

These are very complex issues which will require further work and consultation. SIB has already indicated considerable identity of view with the director general and has committed itself, with the self-regulating organisations and other regulatory bodies, to an evolutionary approach to disclosure issues. I welcome this and the fact that SIB is already working, through its quality of information working party, to improve the information available, with a view to publishing proposals for comment by the summer of next year. I hope that SIB will pursue this work and introduce new measures within the next 18 months.

European Regional Development Fund Grants

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to discuss with local authorities the use of European regional development fund grants for industrial and regional development in the light of local authority budget constraints.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 November 1990]: I have no specific plans for such a discussion although I regularly meet local authorities during the course of my regional visits.

British Steel

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has made an assessment of the likely impact the completion of the single European market will have upon British Steel's ability to compete with European steel makers for orders in the North sea offshore sector.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 30 November 1990]: The Scottish Development Agency's study of the prospects for the steel industry in Scotland will consider all relevant factors. No purpose would be served by duplicating the agency's work.

Clydesdale Steel Works

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will meet the chairman of British Steel plc to discuss the avenues he explored for the possible retention of steel making and seamless tube production at Clydesdale before deciding to close the works.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 30 November 1990]: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of British Steel on 7 September and has no plans for a further meeting at this stage.

Seamless Tubes

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions have taken place between the Department for Trade and Industry and British Steel on the company's relationship with its competitors in the seamless tube market.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 30 November 1990]: All discussions between British Steel and the Department on any subject are conducted on a confidential basis. I intend to respect that confidence.

Coalfield Areas (Funding)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of the scope, funding and operation of European Community funding for coalfield and former coalfield areas under the RECHAR programme, and of the work undertaken by his Department to assist with the operation and monitoring of this programme, together with details of any restrictions that have been placed upon the abilities of local authorities to fund schemes which would otherwise have attracted grants under the RECHAR programme.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 5 December 1990]: The European Commission's notice about the RECHAR initiative for Community assistance to coal-mining areas was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities of 27 January 1990. This set out, inter alia, the eligible measures and the criteria for the definition of eligible areas. The Commission's decisions as to eligible areas were published in the Official Journal of 18 July 1990. Eleven programmes of measures were submitted by the Government to the Commission on 26 July 1990 and are currently awaiting Commission approval. The Commission has indicated that the financial allocation to the United Kingdom areas will be 156·2 million ecu.

My Department, the Departments of the Environment and of Employment, the Welsh Office and the Scottish Office, which are responsible for the applications, have consulted widely with local and other authorities in matters relating to the preparation, operation and monitoring of RECHAR programmes.

Both local authority and other schemes are eligible for RECHAR grant. Detailed allocations will depend on decisions by programme monitoring committees when the programmes have been approved. As it is not possible to say in advance which particular schemes will attract grant, the last part of the question does not arise.

WALES

Student Courses

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what numbers and what percentages of full-time students in further education and tertiary colleges in each county in Wales are studying the following types of courses (a) A and AS-levels, (b) BTEC (first and national diploma) and (c) GCSE.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information for 1989-90 is as follows:

	A and A/S levels		BTEC First and National Diploma		GCSE
	Number	Per cent	Number	Per cent	Number	Per cent
Clwyd	451	13	1,528	45	251	7
Dyfed	50	2	1,337	51	40	2
Gwent	904	23	1,106	28	297	7
Gwynedd	69	4	782	48	—	—
Mid Glam	75	2	1,281	38	53	2
Powys	13	2	420	52	40	5
South Glam	349	13	819	30	322	12
West Glam	1,632	35	1,610	35	262	6
Wales	3,543	15	8,883	38	1,265	5

Numbers relate to full-time and sandwich students following the required courses at higher and further education and tertiary colleges. They are shown as a percentage of the total number of full-time and sandwich students on further education courses.

Welsh Language

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he plans to take as a result of the effects of the compulsory teaching of Welsh at secondary level upon the teaching of modern languages in those schools in non-native Welsh-speaking areas which have traditionally offered more than one modern language to GCSE level.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 1 November. Schools are free to offer pupils the choice of more than one modern foreign language in addition to Welsh.

Education

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will meet representatives of the youth services in Wales to discuss the development of the core curriculum.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I see no immediate need to do so. Our officials continue to be engaged in discussions with representatives of the youth service on the development of a core curriculum.

Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the standard indicators used by his Department to quantify the extent of alcohol abuse problems in any part of Wales and the figures against each such standard indicator for each county in Wales for each of the last five years for which figures are available, together with the percentage of the population which is represented by the figure against each such indicator.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Social problems resulting from alcohol misuse are diverse and varied and they are not possible to define in terms of standard indicators. However, details of death and discharges from national health service hospitals in Wales of patients with principal diagnosis relating to alcohol are shown in the table. Consideration is being given to methods of obtaining clearer indicators.

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which Minister at the Welsh Office will take direct responsibility for discussions, communications and negotiations in regard to any application to establish a national health service trust in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Section 5 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 confers power on me to establish, by order, national health service trusts in Wales.

Care and Repair Agency Schemes

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the future funding of care and repair agency schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Following the success of an experimental scheme, we plan that the resources available for associated local agencies will be increased to £360,000. This is almost double the current level of funding and forms part of an agreed support package covering the next five years. In addition grant aid of above £105,000 is envisaged in order to establish a developmental unit specifically for care and repair in the Principality.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Domestic Violence and Rape

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the number of successful prosecutions for (a) cases of domestic violence, (b) rape by a person known to the victim and (c) rape by a person unknown to the victim for each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: Information on prosecutions and convictions is not collected centrally in sufficient detail to distinguish either domestic violence or whether an assailant is known to the victim in rape cases. Some information concerning rape cases is available from recent research studies in "Changes in rape offences and sentencing", Home Office research study 105 and "Concerns about rape", Home Office research study 106. Copies of both publications are available in the Library.

Social Security Fraud

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) women and (b) men are currently serving prison sentences for social security fraud; and if he will give these figures for the years 1970 to 1990, respectively.

Mr. John Patten: The available information given in the table relates to the number of persons sentenced to immediate custody each year for social security offences for 1970 to 1989. Data for 1990 are not yet available.

Football Spectators

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all persons or organisations in Scotland with whom arrangements have been made by his Department with a view to enforcing the Football Spectators (Corresponding Offences in Scotland) Order 1990; what form these arrangements have taken; and what further measures he intends to take to promote this order.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Article 3 of the Football Spectators (Corresponding Offences in Scotland) Order 1990 specifies the Crown Office, Edinburgh, as the authority in Scotland that will certify the conviction of a person there of an offence specified in schedule 1 to the order. These arrangements are well known to the procurator fiscal. No further formal arrangements are required.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all persons or organisations in Italy with whom arrangements have been made by his Department with a view to enforcing the Football Spectators (Corresponding Offences in Italy) Order 1990; what form these arrangements have taken; and what further measures he intends to take to promote this order.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Article 3 of the Football Spectators (Corresponding Offences in Italy) Order 1990 specifies the Ministry of Grace and Justice as the authority in Italy that will certify the conviction of a person there of an offence specified in schedule 1 to the order. No further formal arrangements are required.

The standing committee of the European convention on spectator violence and misbehaviour at sports events urged member states, which include Italy, to act vigorously on the basis of article 5 of the convention in prosecuting hooligans at sports events.

I understand that the Ministry of Justice has reminded the Italian courts that confirmed convictions involving British nationals should be reported to it.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he will take in relation to persons convicted abroad of offences corresponding to those set out in schedule 1 of the Football Spectators Act 1989, but whose cases are subsequently subject to appeal proceedings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In accordance with section 22(4) of the 1989 Act a restriction order may not be made in relation to a person convicted in a country outside England and Wales of a "corresponding offence" if it appears that the conviction is the subject of proceedings in a court of law in that country questioning the conviction.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all persons or organisations in Sweden with whom arrangements have been made by his Department with a view to extending the measures outlined in the Football Spectators (Corresponding Offences in Italy) Order 1990, to cover offences committed in Sweden; what form these arrangements have taken; and what further steps he intends to take to extend these measures.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are in discussion with the Swedish authorities on this matter. No formal arrangements have been agreed as yet.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Crop Damage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly of 21 November, Official Report, column 135, if he will place the relevant research on damage to crops in the Library.

Mr. Maclean: I will place the information in the Library as soon as possible.

Eggs

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was (a) the number and (b) the value of eggs (i) imported into the United Kingdom and (ii) exported from the United Kingdom in each month since September 1989.

Mr. Curry: The number and value of shell eggs (i) imported into the United Kingdom and (ii) exported from the United Kingdom from September 1989 up to and including October 1990 (latest available figures) are set out in the table:

Global Warming

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply of 16 November, Official Report, column 250, whether the Agriculture Council meeting on 27 November discussed the relationship between European agricultural practices and global warming.

Mr. Curry: This topic was not on the agenda for this Council and was not discussed.

Rabies

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are now being taken to prevent the spread of rabies to the United Kingdom from the European continent following recent developments in the channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Eurotunnel has implemented agreed measures to prevent the possible entry of rabies-susceptible animals while the tunnel is being built. These include fencing, staged security zones, visual observation at openings in fencing and a system to ensure that any animals which are seen in the tunnel are reported.

Radiation Exposure

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish measured and estimated annual radiation dose equivalent uptakes in milliSieverts per annum by members of the general public living near Bradwell and Dungeness nuclear power stations arising directly from radiation in the local environment and from consumption of land produce; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Information on radiation doses to the general public from radio activity in the marine and coastal environment and from consumption of locally produced foodstuffs around Bradwell and Dungeness power stations is published annually by this Department in the "Terrestrial Radioactivity Monitoring Report: Radioactivity in Food and Agricultural Products in England and Wales" and "Aquatic Environment Monitoring Report: Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles". The latest copies of both reports are in the Library of the House.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pesticide products remain to be reviewed; and how long he expects this work to take.

Mr. Maclean: This extensive list of information was announced on 1 November and is available in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Purchasing

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the purchasing policy of his Department.

Mr. Jack: The Department is bound by the Government's policy that purchasers should base all procurement of goods and services on value for money, including quality (or fitness for purpose) and delivery against price. In accordance with that policy, goods and services are acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Under EC rules, and the GATT Government procurement agreement (GPA) where appropriate, the Department is obliged to award contracts in accordance with prescribed procedures aimed at avoiding discrimination on grounds of nationality.

Personal Pensions

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost to the Exchequer, during financial year 1991-92, of the 2 per cent. incentive payment paid from the national insurance fund to people with personal pensions.

Miss Widdecombe: On the assumption that by the end of 1990-91 the number of people with personal pensions is 4·5 million, the Government Actuary estimates that the revenue foregone by the national insurance fund in respect of the 2 per cent. incentive will be £600 million in 1991-92.

Direct Payment of Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is taking to make clear to staff and claimants that the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987 allows for benefit administered clerically to be paid directly into the bank account or building society belonging to a claimant, their spouse or other person acting on the claimant's behalf.

Miss Widdecombe: I am arranging for guidance to be issued to local social security offices clarifying the help and advice they can give to individual beneficiaries who have no suitable person to act on their behalf and who request payment direct to bank or building society accounts. The facility is already available for bulk payments of benefit to agents and appointees handling the affairs of customers.

Disability

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to announce details of the disability employment credit scheme; and on what basis the level of credit will be determined.

Mr. Scott: "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" (Cmd. 917) set out the basic structure of the proposed disability employment credit, which, in the light of research and discussion, has now been renamed disability working allowance. A number of responses were received from organisations and individuals which were helpful in working up the provisions relating to disability working allowance set out in the Disability Living Allowance and Disability Working Allowance Bill.

A note giving more detailed information about the benefit, including elements which we propose to set out in regulations in due course, was published on 12 November 1990 and a copy was placed in the Library. This note included illustrative rates of benefit but the level at which the benefit would be introduced in April 1992 will not be settled until nearer the time.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to amend the payment rates of severe disablement allowance to take into account (a) those who do not have sufficient national insurance contributions, (b) those who have never worked and (c) women who have not worked outside the home for a number of years.

Mr. Scott: I have no plans to do so. Severe disablement allowance is already paid to people in these circumstances. From this month age-related additions have been introduced to SDA which focus most help on those who become disabled early in life.

Pensioners

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the extra weekly amount married and single pensioners would now receive if the earnings link had not been broken.

Miss Widdecombe: The full-rate, basic retirement pension, if it had been uprated since 1979 by the higher of prices or earnings, would today be £58·65 per week. For a married couple where the wife is receiving a pension based on her husband's contributions, the combined amount payable would be £94·05. The extra amounts received would therefore be £11·75 and £18·95 respectively. This would cost national insurance contributors an extra £5·5 billion in 1990-91. What really matters to pensioners is their total income from all sources; this rose on average by 31 per cent. between 1979 and 1987.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will list, for each member state of the European Community, the rate of weekly state retirement pension for (a) a single person and (b) a married couple.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the 1989 edition of the Department's publication, "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the European Communities", a copy of which is in the Library. These tables set out the levels of pension in the national currencies together with the sterling equivalent converted according to the purchasing power parity figures as shown in the introduction to the tables.

Computer Centre, Swindon

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the computer centre at Oak house, Swindon, became operational; and if he will make a statement on the progress of implementing the Department's new computer systems.

Mr. Jack: I am pleased to be able to announce that Oak house, Swindon, started processing income support and pensions payments on 3 December. This additional processing centre, run by Sema Ltd. under the direction of the Information Technology Services Agency, will enable the implementation of the operational strategy in local offices to be completed by the middle of next year. A total of 387 local offices have now been connected and 75 per cent. of new income support claims are being processed by computer, thus giving better service to the public, improved job satisfaction to the staff and savings in administration.

DEFENCE

Dockyards (Radiation)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum total radiation dose recorded for any Chatham dockyard worker registered in the defence radiological protection services' record-keeping system; over what period it accrued; and what are the 20 highest doses recorded.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The maximum lifetime total radiation dose for a Chatham worker currently registered in the DRPS's record-keeping system is 511·6 milliSieverts. This total dose was accrued over the period 1 January 1968 to 5 December 1983.

The 20 highest doses recorded for workers so registered are shown in the table:

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will give a breakdown for Rosyth dockyard of annual individual radiation exposure for Rolls-Royce personnel in the bands of (a) nought to 10, (b) 10 to 20, (c) 20 to 30, (d) 30 to 40, (e) greater than 50, (f) greater than 70 and (g) greater than 100 milliSieverts for each year since 1979;

(2) if he will give a breakdown for Devonport dockyard of annual individual radiation exposure for Rolls-Royce personnel in the bands of (a) nought to 10, (b) 10 to 20, (c) 20 to 30, (d) 30 to 40, (e) greater than 50, (f) greater than 70 and (g) greater than 100 milliSieverts for each year since 1979;

(3) if he will give a breakdown for Chatham dockyard of annual individual radiation exposure for Rolls-Royce personnel in the bands of (a) nought to 10, (b) 10 to 20, (c) 20 to 30, (d) 30 to 40, (e) greater than 50, (f) greater than 70 and (g) greater than 100 milliSieverts for each year since 1979;

(4) if he will give a breakdown for the Clyde submarine base at Faslane of annual individual radiation exposure for Rolls-Royce personnel in the bands of (a) nought to 10, (b) 10 to 20, (c) 20 to 30, (d) 30 to 40, (e) greater than 50, (f) greater than 70 and (g) greater than 100 milliSieverts for each year since 1979;

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information requested by the hon. Member is a matter for Rolls-Royce and associates.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the distribution of total radiation exposure for Chatham dockyard workers in the ranges (a) nought to five milliSieverts, (b) five to 10, (c) 10 to 15, (d) 15 to 20, (e) 20 to 25, (f) 25 to 30, (g) 30 to 35, (h) 35 to 40, (i) 40 to 45, (j) 45 to 50, (k) greater than 50, (l) greater than 100, (m) greater than 200, (n) greater than 300, (o) greater than 400, (p) greater than 500, (q) greater than 600, (r) greater than 700 and (s) greater than 750 milliSieverts, in numbers and in terms of percentage of the overall work force.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A breakdown of cumulative radiation exposure for workers registered in DRPS's record-keeping system as working at Chatham dockyard, including those who have left MOD but whose last MOD establishment was Chatham, is shown in the table:

Dose range	Number of persons	Percentage of work force monitored

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the collective commitment made by the United Kingdom, along with the United States of America and Soviet Union, at the first United Nations special session on disarmament in 1978 to negative security assurances and the renunciation of the use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear weapons states, remains the policy of Her Majesty's armed forces in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government are well aware of their responsibilities and undertakings as set out in their negative security assurance to the United Nations.

Military Doctrine

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what occasions his officials have discussed military doctrine with their Soviet counterparts in the last two years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There have been a number of defence exchanges between the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union in the last two years, during which a wide range of matters have been discussed, including military doctrine. There was also a military doctrine seminar in Vienna from 16 January to 5 February this year, in which both British and Soviet representatives took part.

Conventional Forces

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the inclusion of maritime confidence-building measures in the further discussions on conventional force reductions in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The mandate for the conventional forces in Europe follow-on talks (CFE1A) specifically excludes naval issues.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether those British tanks that will be removed as part of the conventional forces in Europe agreement will be sold or destroyed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The CFE treaty provides for reductions in tank holdings required by the treaty to be by destruction or conversion to certain forms of non-military use. The possibility exists of transferring excess equipment to allies provided national limits on equipment holdings are not exceeded. No final decision on the manner of United Kingdom tank reductions has yet been taken.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects his programme of inspections of nuclear-powered submarines to be completed.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The programme of inspections of our nuclear-powered submarines is continuing and will be completed as soon as possible.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make it his policy to publish a declassified summary of the results of his inspections of the Royal Navy's in-service nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. It is not our general practice to comment on the material state of individual nuclear-powered submarines.

Radiation Exposure

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which groups of service personnel are monitored for levels of radiation exposure.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Groups monitored for exposure to ionising radiation include: nuclear submarine operating, maintenance and training personnel; radiographers employed in hospitals, non-destructive testing units, clearance diving teams, explosives ordnance disposal units and in general medical, dental and nuclear medicine units; users of high-voltage equipment (which may emit X-rays) such as radar operators and security personnel; health physicists; personnel involved in handling and maintaining nuclear weapons; personnel employed in NBC training, and personnel employed as instrument calibration technicians and storekeepers.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what records relating to service personnel are held on the national register of radiation workers.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The national register of radiation workers keep records of annual and cumulative lifetime doses on all service personnel who have been dosimeter wearers at any time since 1978 with the exception of those who have requested to opt out of the scheme.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many inspections have been made by radiological protection advisers of nuclear-powered submarines in each year for the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is not the function of a radiation protection adviser (RPA) to carry out inspections, but rather, as required by the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985, regulation 10(1), to advise the employer.

SCOTLAND

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost to Greater Glasgow health board in advertising and assessing competitive tenders for its medical records and secretarial services; and what was the outcome.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Advertising and assessment costs were approximately £5,000. The board is currently considering how to obtain the best quality service and value for money in the future.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been allocated by Greater Glasgow health board to the Glasgow North county medical team for the years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

	Salaries £	Supplies £
1989-90	151,000	6,000
1990-91 (projection)	224,000	10,500
1991-92 (at current prices)	224,000	[1]16,000

[1] This includes resources for additional equipment.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the proposed start and completion dates for the Seafield units to be built by Greater Glasgow health board to house patients from Lennox Castle.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The first unit is sited at Rodger drive, Rutherglen. Building commenced in October 1990 and will finish in October 1991.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what capital projects are to be cut from Greater Glasgow health board's programme following the reduction in the capital investment grant.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Capital allocations to individual health boards for 1991-92 have still to be decided.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how long the Glasgow county medical team will be in the temporary accommodation at Waverley Park school.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The team has been using this accommodation as an administrative base since the week commencing 29 October 1990, when it was relocated from Maryhill health centre. The current accommodation provides more space, is functionally acceptable, and will be used until longer-term accommodation is located.

AIDS

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the expenditure in Lothian region on patients with HIV for the years 1989-90; and what is the expected expenditure for 1990-91.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Lothian health board has estimated that its total expenditure on HIV and AIDS-related services was approximately £2,275,300 in 1988-89 and £2,621,700 in 1989-90. For 1990-91 the board anticipates total expenditure of around £6,158,200 on such services. The board cannot readily distinguish between expenditure on persons with HIV and on those with AIDS.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department has spent on HIV and drugs media campaigns for each of the years from 1984 to 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In Scotland health education at national level is the responsibility of the Scottish health education group. The following table gives details of expenditure incurred by the group on HIV/AIDS and drug misuse media advertising and related activities:

	HIV/AIDS	Drugs
1984-85	—	285·0
1985-86	8·5	235·0
1986-87	86·6	286·2
1987-88	53·2	297·1
1988-89	46·9	206·5
1989-90	77·4	150·0
1990-91	[1]115·2	[1]68·0

[1] Provisional.

From 1988-89 the mass media campaign on drug misuse has been conducted on a Great Britain-wide basis, and the contributions made by the Scottish Home and Health Department towards the costs are shown in the following table:

	£000
1988-89	160
1989-90	200
1990-91	[1]300

Nurses

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who will be the validating body for certification of nurses following the introduction of Project 2000; and who will be legally responsible for student work on the wards on their branch regime following its introduction.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Scotland is currently in negotiation with a number of appropriate agencies about the validation of Project 2000 courses. Project 2000 students will not be health board employees but will be subject to the regulations of their college. They will work in wards under the direction and supervision of registered nurses.

Lanarkshire Health Board

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when representatives of Lanarkshire health board last met with Scottish Office officials; and what was discussed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Representatives of Lanarkshire health board last met with Scottish Office officials on 27 November to discuss the board's accountability review submission.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he intends to take to achieve quality control with the minimum of administration in training and enterprise councils and in training providers.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils agree with my Department a strategy for managing quality. This is an integral part of their corporate and business plans. These plans form the foundation of contractual arrangements between TECs and my Department. This quality strategy sets out the mechanisms the TEC will use to ensure improvements in value for money and relevance of their provision, and includes their arrangements to ensure the capability and efficiency of their training providers. I have taken steps to ensure that administrative procedures imposed upon TECs are kept to a minimum.

Mills (Denton and Reddish)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, if he will list all mills in Denton and Reddish for which improvement notices have been issued by the Health and Safety Executive in respect of removing asbestos; when the notices were issued; how many have been complied with; and whether the Health and Safety Executive has satisfied itself that there is no possibility that asbestos remains a hazard in any mills in the Denton and Reddish constituency.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) issued an improvement notice in respect of the removal of asbestos at Vernon mill, Stockport on 23 February 1990. The notice was not complied with by the due date and HSE successfully prosecuted the managing agents of the mill on 19 November 1990.

Asbestos will continue to present a potential hazard at the mill while remedial work is carried out to comply with the terms of HSE's improvement notice. This work is being monitored by HSE.

Although responsibility for ensuring that asbestos is not a hazard to those employed or to members of the public rests with the owner or occupier of premises, HSE is not aware of a potential hazard from asbestos in any other mills in the Denton and Reddish constituency for which HSE is the enforcing authority for health and safety legislation.

Client Advisers

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how long the new client advisers who interview the recently unemployed are recommended to spend with them.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Lighting Industry

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with the Lighting Industry Federation about improvements in health and safety for workers at their workplaces in respect of lighting requirements.

Mr. Forth: I have had no such discussions.

Display Screens (Safety)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what legislation he intends to bring forward to enable the United Kingdom to meet the requirements of the European Community directive on the minimum safety and health requirements for work with display screen equipment.

Mr. Forth: The United Kingdom has no existing legislation specifically on health and safety of workers using display screen equipment. The Health and Safety Commission is currently discussing with the CBI and the TUC the most appropriate way to implement the directive.

Building Works

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish tables showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c) the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 5 December 1990]: The information requested is as follows. It has not been possible to separate the expenditure between new buildings and renovations.

	1986-7	1987-8	1988-9	1989-90	1990-1
No new buildings	5	9	18	73	131
Spend on new buildings and renovation (£ million)	7·549	8·891	17·041	14·409	34·745
Spend on repair and maintenance (£ million)	4·144	4·338	7·310	7·321	17·238

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a list showing for full-time male and female manual and non-manual workers respectively the two and three-digit SIC industries in which the percentage increase in weekly earnings, including overtime and excluding absence, was (a) less and (b) more than the rate of inflation in the year to April 1990.

Mr. Jackson: The available information on percentage increases in average gross weekly earnings in the year to April 1990, at 2 and 3 digit standard industrial classification (SIC) level, is published in part C of the 1990 new earnings survey report. Information on the percentage increase in the retail prices index (all items) in the year to April 1990 is published in table 6.5 of the latest Employment Gazette. Copies of the publications are in the Library.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will arrange for a copy of the Health and Safety Executive's most recent study of the channel tunnel project, conducted by the accident fire prevention advisory unit, to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Forth: It is not HSE's policy to make reports by its accident prevention advisory unit (APAU) available, as they rely on information provided in confidence by employers.

THE ARTS

Arts Expenditure

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the Government's total expenditure on the arts for each of the past five years and as a total over the same period.

Mr. Renton: Total central Government expenditure on the arts for each of the past five years has been as follows:

	£ million
1986-87	343·3
1987-88	368·3
1988-89	413·9
1989-90	446·3
1990-91	494·2
	2,066·0

Arts Funding (Reforms)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on the structural reforms of arts funding from Nottinghamshire county council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Nottinghamshire county council wrote to my predecessor, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor), on 24 October expressing its reservations about his proposals of 24 September to further strengthen the new regional arts boards.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any new plans to encourage Brazil and Argentina to sign the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty following the bilateral accord signed between the two countries on nuclear controls, at Foz de Iguau on 28 November.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is our policy to take every suitable opportunity to raise non-proliferation issues, and the non-proliferation treaty in particular, with states that are not parties to the treaty.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for nuclear non-proliferation policy of the Foz de Iguau agreement signed between the Presidents of Argentina and Brazil on 28 November.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We regard this statement as a positive step, although we are seeking clarification of some aspects.

We will continue our efforts to secure universal adherence to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, to achieve acceptance by all non-nuclear weapons states of full-scope International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards, and to ensure that national and multilateral nuclear export controls are appropriately devised and effectively implemented.

Football Spectators

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the number of criminal proceedings currently in progress in Italy involving alleged offences by citizens of England and Wales which correspond to the offences contained in schedule 1 of the Football Spectators Act 1989; when is the likely date of completion of each of these proceedings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We understand that 36 England supporters were convicted during the 1990 world cup in Italy. Another eight were released pending trial and a further 23 detained did not have their arrests confirmed and were released. Under bilateral arrangements, the Italian Ministry of Justice informs the British police of any convictions involving such offences; it does this after the legal processes have been completed and any appeals heard. No cases have yet been notified.

The Italian authorities have been asked to provide the likely date of completion of proceedings in each of these cases, and I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Military Forces, Soviet Union

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has made any request to the Soviet military authorities for information concerning recent developments in military forces east of the Urals.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has asked his Soviet opposite number for assurances regarding their intention with regard to treaty limited equipment withdrawn east of the Urals. The Soviet Union has responded with partial information. We and our allies will continue to press for a full account and to monitor the situation carefully.

Confidence-building Measures

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what difficulties have so far been encountered in the implementation of the confidence-building measures agreement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Implementation of the 1986 Stockholm document on confidence and security-building measures has generally been a success. It is particularly encouraging that the challenge on-site inspection regime has become a routine and regular part of its implementation.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will introduce a single agreed national scale for the energy efficiency rating of (a) domestic dwellings and (b) commercial and industrial premises.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There are two commercially available energy labelling schemes for the housing sector both based on the Building Research Establishment's domestic energy model (BREDEM). My Energy Efficiency Office (EEO) in co-operation with the Department of the Environment and the Building Research Establishment (BRE) is working with the National Energy Foundation and MVM-Starpoint, the two organisations providing energy labelling services, to find an acceptable means of making a reliable and simple comparison between the two rating systems.

So far as commercial and industrial buildings are concerned, there is no established labelling scheme at present. The EEO is in touch with developments at BRE and elsewhere and will keep the need for Government involvement under review.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), Official Report, 15 November, column 192, he will set out those areas of detail in regard to the proposed reprocessing contracts to which reference is made, which his Department will require in order to fulfil international nuclear safeguards commitments.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: All material received by AEA Dounreay is subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the UK/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement.

Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the report, "A Field Guide on the Reduction and Disposal of Waste From Oil Refineries and Market Installations", prepared by Concawe, the organisation of European oil companies for environmental protection.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department regularly receives reports from Concawe and a copy of the report in question is already in the departmental library.

Radiation Exposure

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish measured and estimated annual radiation dose equivalent uptakes in milliSieverts per annum by members of the public living near Bradwell and Dungeness nuclear power stations arising directly from radiation emitted from the structures of the power stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The external radiation doses to members of the public living near the nuclear power stations at Bradwell and Dungeness are assessed by measurements taken routinely by the operator and published in annual reports. The most recent annual figures are for 1989, which show a maximum external dose at these stations of 0·3 mSv for the year.

The measurements do not discriminate between external radiation arising from structures and from radiation associated with discharges. The dose assessment represents the total external dose to the most exposed local residents due to these stations.

These doses are more than 10 times lower than the statutory United Kingdom dose limit and are less than one third of the principal dose limit of 1 mSv currently recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP).

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Attorney-General what action he intends to take in order to improve facilities for immigration appeals in Leeds; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department is actively considering increasing the number of hearing rooms available at Coronet house, Leeds for hearing immigration appeals, and a survey will shortly be undertaken with a view to improving the ventilation facilities there. The Lord Chancellor's Department is also keeping under review facilities and staffing levels at all hearing centres in light of the increasing number of appeals.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Attorney-General if he will define the period of delay which is regarded as acceptable before immigration appeal hearings are heard; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: It is impractical to identify any particular period as more or less acceptable because of the widely differing nature of individual appeals, appellants and their representatives. For example, in appeals from persons abroad, their representatives in the United Kingdom may need considerable time to obtain instructions from the appellants.

The Lord Chancellor's Department, however, seeks to keep waiting times for hearings to the minimum that the procedural rules, volume of business and available resources permit.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the number of hearing rooms, adjudicators and support staff available in order to process immigration appeals; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The number of hearing rooms, adjudicators and support staff are being kept under constant review by the Lord Chancellor's Department in light of the rising volume of immigration appeals. In 1989, additional resources were made available to the immigration appellate authorities (IAA) which resulted in a 50 per cent. increase in the number of cases disposed of. The figures requested were as follows on 1 December 1990:

Adjudicators
1 Chief Adjudicator
11 Full-time Adjudicators
70 Part-Time Adjudicators
23½ Hearing Rooms[1]

Immigration Appeal Tribunal (IAT)
1 President
2 Vice-Presidents
2 Part-Time Chairmen
2 Hearing Rooms[2]

Support Staff for Adjudicators and IAT
85 The IAA has been authorised to increase this figure to 96½, and the additional staff should be in post in early 1991.

[1] Adjudicators are permanently based at Thanet House in London, Harmondsworth, Birmingham, Manchester and Leeds but also hear appeals periodically at Edinburgh, Glasgow, Cardiff and Belfast.
[2] At Thanet House in London.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Attorney-General if he will quantify the ratio of immigration appeal personnel to immigration appeal cases on an annual basis for the last three years for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is set out in the table.

	A Cases received by adjudicators	B Applications received for leave to appeal to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal	C[1] Average number of staff in post at the Immigration Appellate Authorities	$\frac{A + B}{C}$
1987	9,735	1,256	77	142·7
1988	14,365	2,211	79	209·8
1989	18,707	3,143	81	269·8
1990[2]	19,653	2,836	85	264·6

[1] Excluding Judicial Personnel.
[2] January to October 1990.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General by whom the judges who will hear the appeal of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings will be selected.

The Attorney-General: The allocation of judges to the Court of Appeal criminal division is the responsibility of the Lord Chief Justice. The allocation of individual cases to those judges is the responsibility of the registrar of criminal appeals and his staff, subject to and in accordance with any directions given by the court.

The Birmingham Six appeals will be heard by Lord Justice Lloyd, Lord Justice Mustill and Lord Justice Farquharson.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General if discussions have taken place between the Director of Public Prosecutions and the Lord Chief Justice regarding the management of the case of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

The Attorney-General: Any discussions which the Director of Public Prosecutions might have with the judiciary in his official capacity would be confidential and would not be disclosed.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Football Matches

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding policing costs for football matches.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have received representations from the Football League, ACPO and the local authority associations as well as from right hon. and hon. Members on the terms of a proposed Home Office circular. The draft circular advises police authorities to recover as far as practicable the full cost of providing police officers inside football grounds.

We are now considering the comments received.

Fire Brigade Employees

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any conveniently available figures for the number of employees of fire brigades who have left to take up positions in the middle east.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not held centrally.

Suicide

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of the apparent suicide of Edwin Robinson in Brixton, he will now publish the report of Judge Tumim on Brixton prison.

Mrs. Rumbold: We hope to do so shortly.

Women Prisoners

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women are in prison for (a) theft and handling stolen goods and (b) fraud and forgery; and if he will provide a breakdown of the categories they fall into.

Mrs. Rumbold: The latest readily available information is given in the table.

Female sentenced prisoners[1] in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales on 30 June 1990: by offence

Offence	Number[2]
Theft of motor vehicle	—
Taking and driving away	1
Other thefts	161
Handling stolen goods	49
Frauds	44
Forgery	6
Other known offences	843
Offence not recorded	149
All offences	1,253

[1]Including those committed in default of payment of a fine.
[2]Provisional figures.

Wounding

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders convicted of grievous wounding have committed the same offence after serving a prison sentence for the first conviction on that offence since 1985.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Information is not available in the form requested. However, it has been estimated that of some 5,800 adult males discharged in 1986 from serving a prison sentence for a conviction of violence against the person, some 2,520 (44 per cent.) were reconvicted of a standard list offence within two years of release; for some 670 the first such conviction was for an offence of violence against the person: that is, approximately 12 per cent. of the 5,800. More information on the reconvictions of persons released from prison service establishments can be found in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales", a copy of which is in the Library.

Prisoners

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the length of time (a) the longest serving prisoner currently on remand and (b) the longest currently serving convicted prisoner has served.

Mrs. Rumbold: According to the records held centrally, which are approximate, the latest readily available information is as follows.

The longest period a person had been held in custody on 30 September 1990 awaiting or during his trial was just over two years and seven months. The trial was completed on 1 November.

On 30 September 1990 the longest continuous period spent in prison service custody under sentence by a serving prisoner was just over 38 years and two months. One other serving prisoner who had been recalled following an earlier release on life sentence licence had spent a total of almost 40 years and 10 months in prison service establishments under sentence.

Domestic Servants

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his review of the arrangements for the admission to the United Kingdom of domestic servants accompanying their employer makes special reference to Kuwait; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The conclusions of the review which were announced in another place by my noble Friend Lord Ferrers on 24 July at columns 1449-50 apply regardless of nationality to arrangements for overseas domestic servants to be admitted to the United Kingdom to continue working for an employer who comes here. Any application to enter or remain in the United Kingdom made as a result of the invasion of Kuwait will be carefully and sympathetically considered.

Isle of Wight Prisons

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the timetable for a scheme to use locally manufactured refuse-derived fuel for a combined heat and power scheme for Isle of Wight prison complexes at Camphill, Albany and Parkhurst; and if he will make it his policy to promote the rapid conclusion of such a scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I understand that the Isle of Wight council is in negotiation with one of the electricity supply companies to construct a power station on the island capable of consuming the total output of refuse-derived fuels produced on the island.

The Home Office study into using such fuel for its prisons on the island has therefore been suspended.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy on promoting the use of recycled materials and renewable energies where relevant to his Department's activities.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Department is investigating the use of refuse-derived fuel (RDF). At the present time one prison is utilising RDF as a replacement for coal on a long-term trial and three other prisons are being looked at to see if they are suitable to undertake similar trials.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is proposing to take to ensure that the prison service reaps the maximum financial and environmental benefits from combined heat and power schemes and that such schemes are given priority.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Department is currently appraising combined heat and power schemes but no decisions have yet been taken to install them in any of our establishments.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the projects and centres to which his Department has contributed financially in respect of research into alcohol misuse, with the figure for each such project or centre in the present financial year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During the past three years the Home Office has commissioned or carried out the following projects:

- A survey of drinking in England and Wales, conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys;
- The Newport alcohol abuse and social disorder demonstration project;
- An evaluation of the effects of experimental byelaws to control public drinking in the central parts of various towns and cities, conducted by the Home Office crime prevention unit;
- An assessment of the role of economic models in understanding the links between alcohol and crime, conducted by the university of York centre for health economics; and
- A study of drinking and disorder in non-metropolitan areas, carried out by the Home Office research and planning unit.

In the current financial year the Home Office has spent £15,000 on research into alcohol misuse.

Data Protection

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy towards the use of data for computer matching to create personal computer profiles for commercial and mailing purposes.

Mrs. Rumbold: We will carefully consider any recommendation the Data Protection Registrar may make when his consideration of the issue of computer matching is complete.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to increase the funding of the office of the Data Protection Registrar; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have agreed a 1991-92 increase of 8·6 per cent. in cash terms on the previous year. Funding will continue to be determined in the light of expenditure bids and overall public spending constraints.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the retention of data concerning acquittals on police computer records.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The recording of data on police force computers is a matter for individual chief officers. They are guided by the code of practice for police computer systems which has been prepared by the Association of Chief Police Officers. A copy of the code is in the Library. Prosecution information is not retained on the police national computer in the event of an acquittal.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there are any United Kingdom Government or European Community proposals to extend data protection legislation to manual files; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government have no present plans to extend data protection legislation to manual files. The draft directive on data protection, issued by the Commission of the European Communities on 13 September, covers structured collections of manual data. Negotiations on the draft are expected to start next year.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions were initiated by the Data Protection Registrar in (a) 1987, (b) 1988, (c) 1989 and (d) 1990 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The figures, collected by reference to the time when cases were brought to court, are as follows:

	Number
1987	1
1988	4
1989	19
[1]1990	17

[1] To date.

Most of the prosecutions were for failure to register. Good practice in the handling of data is enforced primarily through discussions with data users or their representative bodies, supported where necessary by enforcement notices.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has made within the European Community concerning the issuing of a directive on data protection; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: None as yet. The Government are consulting United Kingdom organisations with an interest in data protection and will take their views into account in negotiations on the draft directive. We expect these to start next year.

Charities

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals for the reform of the law affecting charities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Government's proposals are set out in the White Paper, "Charities: A Framework for the Future", which was presented to Parliament on 16 May 1989.

Personal Advisers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many personal advisers Ministers of his Department have; if he will list them by name, showing the date of appointment, salary bands and areas of responsibility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: One special adviser, Mr. Tony Kerpel, is employed in the Home Office. He was appointed with effect from 3 December 1990. He will provide advice on a wide range of Home Office subjects.

It is not the practice to disclose the salaries of individual advisers as they are negotiated individually in relation to previous outside earnings and are therefore confidential.

Durham Prison

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action he is taking following the criticism of the prison authorities made by Mr. Justice Potts in connection with the murder in Durham prison of 19-year-old Darren Brook; and whether such action will seek to establish responsibility for what happened and seek to prevent its recurrence;

(2) if he will call for a report on the circumstances in which Darren Brook was confined in a cell at Durham prison with a long-term prisoner, having been sentenced to a period of custody in a young offenders' institution; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: A full investigation was carried out into the circumstances of Mr. Brook's tragic death as a matter of urgency by the governor at Durham prison in January of this year. This led to the implementation of revised and improved procedures on the young offender wing. The trial judge, Mr. Justice Potts, has expressed satisfaction at the steps taken at the prison to avoid a similar occurrence and I am similarly satisfied. A fellow young offender has recently been convicted of Mr. Brook's murder.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the analysis of returns from justices' clerks regarding the number of poll tax liability orders made by magistrates courts is now available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The analysis of returns from justices' clerks is not complete but responses are available from 89 per cent. of justices ' clerks. These show that by the end of September liability orders had been made against 344,307 people. We will continue to monitor the situation.

Overseas Electors

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the ministerial and departmental visits made overseas in 1990 in connection with the promotion of the changes in the rights of overseas electors; what, in each case, was the cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Neither Home Office Ministers nor officials made visits overseas as part of the publicity arrangements for the extension of the overseas franchise under the Representation of the People Act 1989.

Police Complaints Procedure

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report on the location of exhibits requested by Paul Malone, a constituent of Liverpool, Broadgreen, to allow him to proceed with action against certain police officers and on the reasons why they have not been released to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that Mr. Malone has recently obtained summonses against three officers of the Cheshire constabulary. The supply of police documents to the courts is a matter for the chief officer of police.

Carriers' Liabilities Act

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sums have been paid by each airline consequent upon the Immigration (Carriers' Liabilities) Act 1987 and by way of penalty for carrying non-visa holders from visa countries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not the practice to disclose information on the record of individual airlines under the Act. The total amount incurred by all carriers (that is, airlines and sea operators) to mid-November 1990 was £22·792 million, of which £8·135 million had been paid; liabilities had been waived in respect of £1·142 million, leaving £13·515 million outstanding.

Separate information on the payments relating to the carriage of visa nationals without valid visas is not available.

TRANSPORT

Rear Lights

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to limit the number and intensity of permitted red lights in car rear windows.

Mr. Chope: I have no plans to limit the number of red lights that may be fitted at the rear of cars or to introduce additional limits for intensity except that additional stop lamps fitted in rear windows on new cars sold after 1 April 1991 will be limited to half the intensity of standard stop lamps.

Buses

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what effective measures are available to promote the use of buses, as referred to in the White Paper "This Common Inheritance"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: A variety of traffic management measures including with flow and contra-flow bus lanes, priority at traffic signals, exemptions from prohibited turns, bus stop clearways, and other types of waiting and loading restrictions are available to give buses an advantage over other traffic.

My Department is examining current practice with a view to issuing further guidance for the benefit of local authorities, bus operators, and enforcement agencies.

Rail Freight

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what level of grant aid or subsidy was provided to rail freight for each year between 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail's freight business has a commercial remit, and has received no Government grant aid or subsidy in these years apart from its share of level crossings grant under EC regulation 1192/69. Other bodies can receive grants towards the cost of rail freight facilities under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 if a switch from road freight to rail produces worthwhile environmental benefits at a reasonable cost. Since 1979 the Government have awarded 136 section 8 grants totalling £53 million, removing over 25 million tonnes of freight a year from the roads.

Bypasses

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what guidance is given by his Department to local authorities in assessing the need to construct bypasses;

(2) what provision he has made in the estimate of spending need for the next financial year of the Cheshire county council for capital expenditure upon road construction; what is the comparable figure in real and cash terms for the current financial year; and what consideration he gave in setting these figures to the need to construct the Wheelock bypass.

Mr. Chope: Transport supplementary grant and credit approvals for capital expenditure on local roads are allocated in the light of information presented in the annual transport policies and programme submissions from the 108 local highway authorities in England. The allocations for 1991-92 will be announced shortly.

Cheshire county council's latest submission shows that the main works on the Wheelock bypass are not due to start until 1993-94 and that the authority plans to spend only £55,000 on its design and other preliminary expenses in 1991-92.

Motor Cars

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is considering to penalise the promotion of motor car manufacture and sales based on power, speed and acceleration as against efficiency, safety and fuel economy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have discussed with repesentatives of the Advertising Standards Authority how to encourage car manufacturers to place less emphasis on speed in their advertising. The Advertising Standards Authority has recently required the withdrawal of several advertisements.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reduction of carbon dioxide emissions is achieved by the use of lead-free petrol when measured against leaded petrol; and if he will quantify this reduction per annum.

Mr. Chope: Using unleaded rather than leaded fuel results in a small reduction of fuel efficiency and therefore increased emissions of carbon dioxide. The use of unleaded fuel helps to reduce emissions of lead from vehicles into the air and is essential to the operation of catalytic converters which reduce emissions of other pollutants. The Government will continue to promote the widespread use of unleaded fuel which now accounts for almost 40 per cent. of petrol sales.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what would be the resultant reduction in pollutants emitted by car exhausts if a zero growth in domestic vehicles was achieved against projections of growth in these vehicles over the next decade.

Mr. Chope: Total emissions depend on the amount of traffic and the rate of emissions per vehicle. Assuming that three-way catalysts are fitted to new cars from the end of 1992, and taking the mid-point between the Department's high and low traffic demand growth forecasts, emissions of carbon monoxide, oxides of nitrogen and hydrocarbons from cars are expected to decline by over half between 1991 and 2000.

If the average fuel efficiency of cars remains constant over the same period and the same mid-point traffic demand forecast is used, we would expect carbon dioxide emissions from cars to grow by about 30 per cent. However, there is considerable scope for fuel efficiency improvement in this sector and it is not possible at this stage to make any useful estimate of what the actual change in carbon dioxide emissions might be.

Speed Limits, Essex

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects a decision to be taken on Essex county council's highway committee's application of October 1988 to extend the 30 mph and 40 mph speed limit zones in Danbury; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 7 December 1990]: A decision in principle will be sent to Essex county council before the end of this month.

Subject to the completion of the necessary statutory procedures, the Secretary of State could confirm an order early in 1991.

WALES

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the projects and centres to which his Department has contributed financially in respect of research into alcohol misuse, with the figure for each such project or centre in the present financial year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on Wednesday 5 December 1990, c. 150.

Additionally some funding from the Department for generic activity has been applied to work related to alcohol misuse.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish any circulars and draft guidance issued by his Department in pursuance of the announcement by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary at his Department on Drinkwise day of finance for projects to tackle alcohol abuse.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The relevant circulars, WHC(90)78 and WHC(90)79, were issued on 5 December 1990. Copies of these are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what targets he expects to be met as a result of the provision for alcohol abuse, as announced by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary at his Department on Drinkwise day.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Short-term targets will be sent when allocations are made, taking into account what health and local authorities consider can be achieved by their proposed projects. These will contribute towards achieving the long-term aim set by the Health Promotion Authority for Wales in the health for all strategy. Examples of good practice will be circulated.

Disabled People

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of disabled people employed in his Department; and what is the target quota.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department employs 29 people who are registered disabled; they represent 1·3 per cent. of all staff. The target quota is 3 per cent.

Student Courses

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what numbers and what percentages of full-time students over the age of 16 years in each county in Wales are studying in (a) further education and tertiary colleges and (b) maintained 11 to 18 years schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information for 1989-90 is as follows:

The numbers and percentages of full-time students over 16 years of age

	Further education and tertiary colleges[1]		Maintained secondary schools[2] 11-18		Other[3]

Hospital Treatment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the chairmen of the health authorities on the computation of appropriate charges for cross-border flows of patients for hospital treatment (a) inside and outside Wales and (b) across health authority boundaries within Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: None. National health service service providers both inside and outside Wales will be expected to price their services on the basis of what it costs to provide them; and charges will accordingly vary as between providers. Information systems are being improved to facilitate more accurate and detailed costing of services in the future.

Ewe Premium

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in paying the second instalment of the ewe premium scheme to Welsh sheep producers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The second advance payment has, in fact, been brought forward and has already been issued to 95 per cent. of the 17,700 claimants. The first and second advances together will have benefited farmers' cash flow by around £25 million.

National Library of Wales

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral answer of 3 December, Official Report, columns 4-5, if he will place a copy of the staff inspection report into the national library of Wales, Aberystwyth in the Library.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is not the Department's practice to place copies of staff inspection reports in the Library of the House.

South Glamorgan Health Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority regarding the level of baseline budget for the next financial year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend has had no such discussions to date; but he will be meeting the chairmen of all district health authorities in Wales early in the new year to discuss allocations for 1991-92.

Land Use, Glamorgan

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the areas of unused or underused land in Glamorgan; and in respect of what proportion of that land there are no firm proposals for development.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not available. However, land registers have been published, and are available for inspection at both the Department's Cardiff office and each district authority's main office, showing unused or underused land held by the public sector in the districts of Cardiff, Lliw Valley, Ogwr, Rhymney Valley, Swansea, Taff Ely, and the Vale of Glamorgan.

Programme for the Valleys

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans for the future of the programme for the valleys; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have announced my intentions for the future of the programme for the valleys today. They are set out in the documents "The Valleys: Partnership with the People". I have sent a copy to each right hon. and hon. Member whose constituency falls within the valleys programme area and have also placed copies in the Library of the House.

Gipsy Sites

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of all authorised gipsy sites in Wales, indicating when they were established, together with the ordnance survey grid reference number for each site.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is given in the following table.

	Date established	OS grid reference

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Sudanese Refugees

28. Mr. Cox: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what discussions he has had with British representatives of organisations working with Sudanese Christian refugees as to possible financial assistance for their work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alison: None, because the Commissioners' funds are not by law available for such purposes. The primary duty of the Commissioners is the support of the full-time parochial ministry of the Church of England, in service and retirement, and the bulk of their income is used for that purpose.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Balance of Payments

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what increase in gross domestic product, real disposable incomes and consumer expenditure in each of the years 1985 to 1990 would have been compatible in terms of the Treasury economic model with a continuing balance of payments surplus on current account; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table using the data in the Treasury model to compare the actual with the required outcome in terms of interest rates, employment, unemployment, manufacturing output and house prices.

Mr. Mellor: It has not, since 1978, been the practice to run particular simulations on the Treasury model to meet specific outside requests; but the hon. Member will be aware that the current version of the model is available for Members' use through the Library.

Community Charge

Mr. Radice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has concerning the percentage of gross income accounted for by the community charge at different levels of gross income.

Mr. Mellor: Community charges vary widely according to the area in which households happen to live; their entitlement to transitional relief; and their entitlement to community charge benefit. Information on the relationship between these net payments and gross income will be available in due course from sample surveys such as the 1990 family expenditure survey.

The Gulf

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the economic consequences of a military option in the Gulf.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 29 November 1990]: The Government's firm objective is to resolve the Gulf crisis by peaceful means on the basis of full implementation of the resolutions adopted by the United Nations Security Council. To achieve this, it is essential to establish a credible military option, so that Saddam Hussein is left in no doubt that he is facing a military force which could compel him to leave Kuwait. My right hon. Friend the Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major) drew attention in his autumn statement to uncertainties in the economic outlook generated by the Gulf crisis.

Manufacturing Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the increase in imports of manufactures since 1973 originated in other EEC countries; whether he expects the figure to increase or decrease as a result of (i) the Single European Act and (ii) full membership of the EMS; and what is the latest figure for import penetration for the EEC.

Mr. Mellor: A total of 57 per cent. of the increase in the value of imports of manufactures between 1973 and 1989 originated from the EC. The EC's share in the United Kingdom's total trade, both exports and imports, can be expected to rise as a result of the Single European Act and full membership of the EMS. Figures for import penetration in each of the EC countries can be obtained from the latest issue of "International Financial Statistics", published by the International Monetary Fund.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1970 and for the latest quarter, in index form based on 1985, the volume of exports of manufactures from the United Kingdom, Germany, France, the United States of America and Japan.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.
The information is in the table.

THE ARTS

British Library

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assessment he has made of the effect on scientific research in the United Kingdom of financial decisions imposed on the British library, including the cut in scientific journals.

Mr. Renton: It is for the British library board to decide on the allocation of its resources, taking into account the needs of its clients. The library is arranging alternative access where possible to the scientific journals and hopes to reinstate them in 1992. Most of them will continue to be taken by the library's document supply centre. The grant in aid for 1991-92 will be £63·79 million, an increase of 10 per cent. over the current year.

Performing Arts (Deficits)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the level of deficits in performing arts companies.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 5 December 1990]: I am advised by the funding bodies that in total the accumulated forecast deficits at the end of this financial year for performing arts companies, including theatre companies, in Britain will be approximately £20·8 million. There are wide variations in the financial circumstances of the companies, both national and regional, within this total.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on (a) national and (b) regional theatre companies in deficit.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 5 December 1990]: I understand that in total the accumulated forecast deficits at the end of the current financial year for the two national theatre companies are just over £3 million. The figure for other Arts Council-funded theatre companies is approximately £3·5 million, and the figure for theatre companies funded by the Scottish and Welsh Arts Councils and the regional arts associations is approximately £2·5 million. There are wide variations in the financial circumstances of individual companies, both national and regional, within these estimates.

PRIME MINISTER

Downing Street (Gates)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if he has any plans to dismantle the gates at the end of Downing street.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 6 December at column 166.

Fiscal and Environmental Policy

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will now take steps to achieve the integration of fiscal and environmental policy.

The Prime Minister: We already seek to ensure that all the environmental implications of policy decisions under discussion are considered before conclusions are reached. My right hon. Friend has nominated the Minister of State, Treasury the Minister responsible for considering the environmental implications of policies.

Ministerial Committee on the Environment

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister how he intends to ensure parliamentary accountability of the new ministerial committee on the environment.

The Prime Minister: Cabinet Committees are internal mechanisms for co-ordinating policy within Government. They do not affect ministerial accountability to Parliament.

Parliamentary Sitting Times

Ms. Harman: To ask the Prime Minister if he will establish a review of the hours at which the House sits and the dates of the summer recess.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Sir R. McCrindle) on 6 December at column 452.

Nature Conservation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister is responsible for answering for the actions of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee; and if he will publish a table showing the resource allocations to England, Scotland and Wales and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee for 1991-92 as compared with the recommendations in the Inbucon report.

The Prime Minister: The Joint Nature Conservation Committee is a committee of all three country councils each of which is answerable to its own territorial Secretary of State for all its functions, including those exercised through the JNCC. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment would normally expect to take the lead in answering any questions about the committee.

The predecessor of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 9 November that the grant in aid to the Nature Conservancy Council for England (NCCE) in 1991-92 had been set provisionally at £32·411 million. Announcements about the grant in aid to be provided to the new agencies in Scotland and Wales will be made shortly by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales respectively.

The Inbucon report was commissioned by the Nature Conservancy Council to assist it in preparing its proposed forward plans. It was made available on request by the council in October. The figures contained in the report are therefore already available for examination.

Hospitals (Foreign Use)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Prime Minister how many unused or disused civilian or military hospitals in the United Kingdom are owned or run by foreign Governments or armies; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Details of civilian hospitals owned or run by foreign Governments are not available.

United States forces have contingency hospitals at RAF Chessington, RAF Little Rissington, RAF Nocton Hall and RAF Bicester. These are laid out as hospitals, but supplies and staff have to be brought in to activate them at a time of crisis.

ENVIRONMENT

Village Green, Bromley Cross

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to hold a public inquiry into the ownership of the common land known as the village green at Brick Back, Bromley Cross, Bolton; what representations he has received about this land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The ownership of the land at Brick Back, which has been registered as village green, has been referred to a commons commissioner, in accordance with section 8 of the Commons Registration Act 1965. A commissioner will hear evidence on ownership at a hearing to be held on 12 February 1991 at Bolton town hall. To date a number of representations have been received from Bromley Cross residents, four of whom claim to have knowledge of the ownership of the land.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the percentage of persons subject to the community charge who are exempted on the basis of category C9: residential care workers who are employed at a very low salary for each local authority in England.

Mr. Key: From the returns received by the Department, the table gives the information requested for those authorities which reported 20 or more persons in the category of exemptions on 1 June 1990. The average proportion for England as a whole is ·004 per cent.

Number of residential care workers employed at a very low salary who were exempt from the personal community charge on 1 June 1990, as a percentage of the number of persons subject to a personal community charge on 1 June 1990

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to protect community charge payers from cuts in local authority services due to community charge limitations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The action we have taken, and shall not hesitate to take again, is to protect charge payers from authorities' excessive budgets.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will undertake a review of the level of aggregate external finance being made available to local authorities in 1991-92;

(2) if he will undertake a review of the level of revenue support grant being made available to local authorities in 1991-92;

(3) when he intends to bring before the House the final reports of the local authority finance settlement for 1991-92;

(4) if he will undertake a review of the phased withdrawal of the area protection grant from local authorities in 1991-92 and 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Formal consultation on our proposals for the local government finance settlement ended on 28 November. My right hon. Friend is now considering the representations made. He expects to lay the settlement reports before the House soon.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his best estimates of the size of the average poll tax bill in 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend has made no estimate of the average level of community charges in 1991-92, which depends upon the decisions of the local authorities. If authorities spent in line with their standard spending assessments, the average community charge should be close to £380.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he expects to conclude his review of the poll tax;

(2) if he has any plans to undertake a fundamental review of the poll tax transitional relief scheme for its operation in 1991-92;

(3) if he has any plans to undertake a fundamental review of the operation of the joint and several liability provisions of the poll tax for 1991-92;

(4) if he will list all those bodies he intends to consult on the future of local government finance.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend announced on 5 December that we shall be conducting a fundamental review of local government finance and structure.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to undertake a review of the existing restrictions on the use of capital receipts by local authorities for 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: We are already consulting on changes which we consider to be necessary for 1991-92. The local authority associations have recently submitted a paper setting out their proposals and this will be considered carefully.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people serving in Her Majesty's forces have appealed against their being included on the community charge register; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake a review of his proposed poll tax-capping rules for 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: As I told the House on 3 December, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I stick firmly by the intended criteria announced by my right hon. Friend the Member for Bath (Mr. Patten) on 31 October.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each local authority his proposed basic credit approval for 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: Basic credit approvals for individual local authorities for 1991-92 will be announced in due course. I will arrange for a copy of this information to be placed in the Library of the House of Commons when it is available.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to review his proposed standard spending assessments for local authorities for 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: We are considering the representations made in response to our proposals for 1991-92 as set out in the statement on 31 October. We will announce our decisions shortly.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all working papers, implementation documents, departmental circulars and other publications, regulations and notices, in draft or final form, that have been issued in 1990 arising from the implementation of the poll tax.

Mr. Key [holding answer 7 December 1990]: My Department has issued the following regulations, practice notes and consultation documents on the community charge and the national non-domestic rating system in 1990.

Regulations

The Personal Community Charge (Relief) (England) Regulations 1990/2

The Standard Community Charge (Multipliers) Order 1990/129

Practice Notes

The Community Charge: Maintaining the Community Charge Register—Community Charge Practice No. 24.

Non-domestic rates: Transitional Arrangements—Non-domestic rates Practice Note No. 3.

Non-domestic rates: The Boundary between the Community Charge and Non-domestic (Business) rates: Definition of Domestic Property—Non-domestic rates Practice Note No. 4.

Non-Domestic rates: Alteration of Lists and Appeals—Non-domestic rates Practice Note No. 5.

Non-domestic rates: Discretionary Rate Relief—A Non-domestic rates Practice Note.

Consultation Documents

Non-domestic rating: Bed and Breakfast Accommodation.

Business rates: Valuation of Property formerly in Enterprise Zones

The Standard Community Charge and other Matters.

Community Charge Bill.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will undertake a review of his estimates of poll tax collection rates for 1990-91 and the likely impact on poll tax bills in 1991-92;

(2) what are his best estimates of the amount of poll tax income that will prove impossible to collect by the end of the current financial year.

Mr. Portillo: When local authorities come to set community charges for 1991-92 they will make proper estimates of the likely level of collection for that year and of how much uncollected in 1990-91 will prove to be uncollectable and should be written off. Such estimates are not for me to make.

Boundary Review, Humberside

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give (a) the cost, (b) the amount of staff time in hours and (c) the number of meetings of the commission and the attendance at each devoted by the Local Government Boundary Commission to (i) the interim report and (ii) the draft proposal in its further review of the county of Humberside and list the changes occurring in the commission and its staff between the two.

Mr. Key: In the period between the publication of its interim report and its draft proposals, two new members were appointed to fill vacancies on the commission, and eight staff out of a total of 35 at all grades were changed. It is not possible to identify the cost of any particular element of the commission's work.

The other questions concerning the conduct of its work are for the commission.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what meetings or discussions occurred between (a) himself or his predecessors, (b) other Ministers in his Department and (c) officials of the Local Government Boundary Commission on its review of county Humberside between 7 March and 27 November.

Mr. Key: None, though the chairman of the commission meets Ministers from time to time to discuss matters of general interest.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will refer back to the local authority boundary commission the further review of the county of Humberside, for reconsideration by a commission with changes in composition from that which considered the further review.

Mr. Key: No.

Environment and Development Conference

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans his Department has for consulting with non-governmental development organisations in the preparatory process for the United Nations conference on environment and development to be held in Brazil in 1992;

(2) what plans his Department has for holding national consultations in preparation for the United Nations conference on environment and development in 1992.

Mr. Trippier: My Department has commissioned the International Institute for Environment and Development, on behalf of the United Kingdom committee for UNEP, to hold a series of public meetings to examine the main issues of the 1992 United Nations conference. This will be an important opportunity for the non-governmental community, including development organisations, to contribute to the preparatory process for the conference. In addition, we will welcome submissions from interested individuals or organisations who may wish to put forward their views directly to the Government.

Peat

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 22 November, Official Report, columns 188-89, to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies), what further consideration Her Majesty's Government are giving to the issues raised by peat extraction and nature conservation.

Mr. Yeo: The noble Lord Reay's response to the debate on peatland issues, which took place in another place on 9 May 1990, indicated the issues which should be addressed and how they were to be carried forward. Work on these is progressing both in my Department and elsewhere, but is not yet completed. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State hopes to be able to make a statement about the issues raised by peat extraction and nature conservation in due course.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he intends to make to the criticisms contained in the Nature Conservancy Council report published on 28 November about the reorganisation of the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Baldry: None. These issues were fully dealt with during the debates in both Houses on part VII of the Environmental Protection Act.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to ensure that Britain's ecology continues to be treated as a continuum, following the break-up of the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Baldry: Under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, ecological issues affecting Great Britain as a whole will fall within the remit of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee of the three new country councils.

Ecology

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake a review of the resources devoted by his Department to developing and maintaining standards of ecological understanding among its officials.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has access to a wide range of expertise within his Department, including knowledge of ecological matters. Training needs are regularly monitored, and there is no need for a specific review in this area.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Her Majesty's Government's policy with regard to the proposal by Senor Enrico Ferri, MEP, in his report to the Committee on Legal Affairs and Citizens Rights (PE 143.353/fin, 5 November 1990), that provisions for liability for impairment to the environment caused by radioactive waste be included in the EC directive on civil liability caused by waste (COM(89) 282 final-C3-0154/89-SYN 217).

Mr. Baldry: The Government are considering their position on the draft directive, and will be consulting widely.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) in how many cases in the last five years sufficient damage has been inflicted upon sites of special scientific interest to render designation meaningless;

(2) how many sites of special scientific interest have been damaged by statutory organisations during the last five years; and in how many of these cases either official permission was given or official approval was signified.

Mr. Baldry: The information is not available in the form requested. Since 1 April 1984 information on the numbers of SSSIs damaged is set out in the Nature Conservancy Council's annual reports, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of sites of special scientific interest which have been damaged or destroyed during the last three years; and what is his estimate of the area affected by this damage or destruction.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number damaged	Estimated area (ha)
1987-88	166	27,297
1988-89	241	30,067
1989-90	324	91,677

This includes damage of all kinds whether significant or not. It includes proposed SSSIs and both those SSSIs notified under the 1981 Act and those notified under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 and not yet renotified.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of whether the present level of protection is sufficient to safeguard the 900 sites which are assessed to be of key importance in their conservation interest; and what action he is taking to provide the necessary protection.

Mr. Baldry: I am satisfied that the SSSI and the national nature reserve systems afford the protection necessary to these sites.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to reduce the damage or destruction of sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Baldry: We are always ready to consider with the NCC and others practicable action to minimise damage to SSSIs. The NCC is encouraged to take all steps necessary to minimise damage, including the entering into of management agreements and in appropriate circumstances by requesting that the Secretary of State make a nature conservation order.

Environmental Protection Conferences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has received an invitation to participate in the conference on environmental protection in practice, organised by International Business Communications, to be held in London on 10 to 11 December.

Mr. Baldry: Yes. Dr. Martin Bigg, head of the local authority unit of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, will be addressing the conference on the subject of pollution regulation.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has received an invitation to contribute to the conference on liquid effluent control to be held at Loughborough university of technology on 17 to 19 December.

Mr. Baldry: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) was invited by the department of chemical engineering at Loughborough university to contribute to the conference on liquid effluent control on 17 to 19 December 1990. HMIP was unable to accept the invitation on this occasion due to other commitments.

Domestic Insulation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much annual central Government expenditure was dedicated to domestic insulation projects for the years 1979 to 1990.

Mr. Yeo: Expenditure on central Government domestic energy efficiency programmes is set out in the table.

£ million

	Homes insulation scheme England	Community insulation project Great Britain

For the corresponding information about the homes insulation scheme in Wales and Scotland I refer the hon. Member to the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland.

Trees and Hedgerows

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of trees and hedgerows which have been lost to the United Kingdom, on an annual basis, for the years 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Baldry: No records of the number of trees lost in the period are available. In the storms of 1987 and 1990 we estimate that some 19 million trees were destroyed—mostly in woodlands. However, despite such losses woodland cover in Great Britain has increased from some 2 million hectares to over 2·3 million hectares in the past 10 years.

Various estimates of hedgerow loss have been made for past periods but none covers precisely the period to which the hon. Member refers. A survey of landscape change in England and Wales carried out for my Department and the Countryside Commission in 1986 by Hunting Technical Services Ltd. showed annual losses of some 2,600 miles of hedgerow between 1947 and 1969, 2,900 miles between 1969 and 1980, and 4,000 miles between 1980 and 1985. However a postal survey of farmers carried out by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in 1985 showed annual losses of 500 miles between 1980 and 1985. The two surveys used different methodologies and neither can be regarded as definitive. Work is continuing to improve information both on the rate of removal and on the extent of new planting.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the mileage of hedgerows which have been removed from England and Wales during the last 10 years.

Mr. Baldry: Various estimates have been made for past periods but none covers precisely the period to which the hon. Member refers.

A survey of landscape change in England and Wales carried out for my Department and the Countryside Commission in 1986 by Hunting Technical Services Ltd. showed annual losses of some 2,600 miles of hedgerow between 1947 and 1969, 2,900 miles between 1969 and 1980, and 4,000 miles between 1980 and 1985. However, a postal survey of farmers carried out by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in 1985 showed annual losses of 500 miles between 1980 and 1985. The two surveys used different methodologies and neither can be regarded as definitive.

Work is continuing to improve information both on the rate of removal and on the extent of new planting.

UN Environment Programme

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much financial support was given to the United Nations Environment Programme, on an annual basis, for the years 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Baldry: Contributions by Her Majesty's Government to the United Nations Environment Programme's environment fund for the period 1979 to 1989 are as follows:

1979-80	600,000
1980-81	600,000
1981-82	600,000
1982-83	600,000
1983-84	750,000
1984-85	750,000
1985-86	750,000
1986-87	1,000,000
1987-88	1,000,000
1988-89	1,250,000

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken to encourage the expansion of the United Nations Environment Programme's role in co-ordinating international environmental action.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom is pressing for UNEP and the World Meteorological Organisation to be charged with overseeing negotiations of a framework convention on climate change. We are also playing an active role in UNEP's preparations for a global convention on biological diversity. It is the aim for both conventions to be ready for the 1992 UN conference on environment and development at which we hope that decisions on strengthening UNEP will be taken.

As evidence of our support for UNEP we intend to increase our 1991 contribution to its voluntary environment fund by one third to £4 million.

Inland Waterways

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what level of grant and or subsidy was provided to inland waterway freight for each year between 1978 and 1989.

Mr. Baldry: The British Waterways Board (BWB) receives annual grant in aid from the Exchequer towards the cost of operating and maintaining all its waterways. The table shows the board's external financing limit (EFL), which covers grant and borrowing, for the years 1978-79 to 1989-90.

BWB finance 1978-79 to 1989-90

£ million

	EFL (outturn) (cash)	EFL (outturn) (1990-91 prices)
1978-79	26·0	65·5
1979-80	25·7	55·5
1980-81	30·0	54·8
1981-82	31·6	52·5
1982-83	39·3	60·9
1983-84	40·8	60·4
1984-85	42·8	60·4
1985-86	44·1	59·1
1986-87	44·8	58·2
1987-88	45·0	55·4
1988-89	44·8	51·4
1989-90	46·9	50·6

Waterways are nowadays used mainly for recreation and amenity; excluding maritime traffic, they carry only 1·5 per cent. of total inland freight. BWB's share of total inland freight (all modes) is 0·1 per cent. All freight traffic on the board's network is now carried by private sector operators. The Government wish to see maximum use of rivers and canals for freight transport where commercially sensible. But customers should be free to choose the mode of transport best suited to their needs. The Government's role is to ensure that conditions of competition are fair, and subject to proper safety and environmental standards.

However, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport can give grants under section 36 of the Transport Act 1981 towards inland waterway freight facilities which bring significant environmental benefits by keeping lorries off unsuitable roads and where, in the absence of grant, the commercial decision would be to use road transport. Five grants, with a total value of £1·4 million, have been awarded up to 1989.

International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the members of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources; and if he will specify the non-governmental agencies which are based in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: The latest figures published by the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources show that it has 663 members and that 119 countries are represented in this membership. I am arranging for a copy of the membership lists to be placed in the Library of the House.

Vacant Public Land

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the relationship between the terms vacant public sector land used in the title of the consultation paper, "Encouraging the Use of Vacant Public Sector Land" and the terms underused or unused land used in the body of the paper.

Mr. Yeo: Existing and proposed arrangements for entry on registers and for the power to direct disposal relate to unused and underused land. The term "vacant land" is employed in the paper as a general term covering both.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether the Government are considering any proposals requiring the purchasers of the unused or underused land to bring the land forward for development within a fixed timetable or else to return the land to the local authority; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the windfall profits arising from the sale by developers of land currently owned by local authorities will be shared with those authorities if the consultation paper, "Encouraging the Use of Vacant Public Sector Land", becomes Government policy;

(3) for what reasons he has limited the grounds of appeal referred to in the consultation paper, "Encouraging the Use of Vacant Public Sector Land", so as not to include an appeal on the basis that the land referred to is not unused or underused, or that the method and timing of disposal is imprudent.

Mr. Yeo: In the consultation paper we proposed that tenderers for a franchise would be required to state their plans for the development and use of the sites included in the package (paragraph 3.18(b)); that arrangements for clawback would be triggered by certain events listed (annex C paragraph 11); and that the grounds of appeal to which owners making representations would be limited would include certain grounds listed (paragraph 3.16). Responses to the consultation paper have included the points raised by the hon. Member and will be taken into account in our further consideration of these issues.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his reasons for proposing in the consultation paper, "Encouraging the Use of Vacant Public Sector Land", a requirement for local authorities to pay for the discounts which will be given to developers to purchase local authority land assets.

Mr. Yeo: The discounts were proposed as an incentive to bring as many as possible of the sites contained in each franchise package into use. Public sector owners dissatisfied with the arrangements could bring into use or dispose of their sites before directions establishing a franchise were issued. All the responses to the consultation paper are currently being analysed and will be taken into account in our further consideration of measures to encourage the use of vacant public land.

Boundary Commission

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guideliness and regulations exist about conflicts of interest in respect of local authority boundary commissioners' connections with authorities whose boundaries are being considered.

Mr. Key: Paragraph 6 of schedule 7 to the Local Government Act 1972 provides that the commission's procedure at, and in connection with, its meetings shall be such as it may from time to time determine.

My right hon. Friend is confident that the commission ensures that no such conflicts arise.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many instances the interim decisions of the Local Government Boundary Commission for England have been substantially different from its draft proposals; and what percentage of total references this constitutes.

Mr. Key: Since decisions on the conduct of reviews are by statute for the commission, the Department does not monitor changes in the views expressed by the commission in its work leading up to a final report. It is implicit, however, in the statutory provisions which ensure that the public has an opportunity to comment on draft proposals, that the commission will take note of these comments, and from time to time change its views.

Valuation and Community Charge Tribunals

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals have been made to the West Yorkshire valuation and community charge tribunal on the question of (a) rating valuation assessments, (b) community charge registrations and (c) level of payment of community charge.

Mr. Key: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
(a) Non-domestic rating appeals	3,053
(b) Community charge appeals	122
(c) None. This is not one of the prescribed grounds for making an appeal.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many amendments have been made to the practice notes used by the valuation and community charge tribunals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Department has issued three letters updating the following community charge practice notes:

Letter	Practice note
18 September 1989	No. 18—Foreign Diplomats and Visiting Forces No. 21—Community Charge Benefit (2)
26 October 1989	No. 9—Sole or Main Residence No. 18—Foreign Diplomats and Visiting Forces
29 December 1989	No. 17—United Kingdom Service Personnel No. 18—Foreign Diplomats and Visiting Forces

In addition to these letters three practice notes have been updated and reissued. These are:

Practice Note No. 10: Data Protection and the Community Charge (2)—(updates Practice Note No. 4)

Practice Note No. 19: Exemptions from the Personal Community Charge (2)—(updates Practice Note No. 2)

Practice Note No. 21: Community Charge Benefit (2)—(updates Practice Note No. 5)

The Institute of Revenues Rating and Valuation is currently revising and updating the practice notes with a view to reflecting changes and modifications brought about by practice and decisions made by the valuation and community charge tribunals.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received over the variations in the decisions taken by valuation and community charge tribunals on the appeals concerning the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: I am not aware that any such representations have been received. The 56 tribunals in England are independent. They must decide each case on its merits and are responsible for their own decisions.

Basildon District Council

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Basildon district council on his proposed financial settlement for 1991-92; if he will publish those representations and any reply sent by his Department; and if he intends to meet representatives of the council in the near future.

Mr. Portillo: I have received representations from Basildon district council on the proposed 1991-92 settlement. It is for the authority to make public its representations if it so chooses. I have no plans at present to meet a delegation from the council.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the Ordnance Survey corporate plan for 1991 to 1994.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today approved the Ordnance Survey corporate plan for 1991-94 and I shall arrange for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Dogs

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications for local authorities of the provisions on dog control in the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and when he proposes to bring the new measures into effect.

Mr. Baldry: The measures proposed in the "Action on Dogs" consultation paper published by my Department last year were widely welcomed by local authorities. They have now been incorporated in the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The Act places duties on district councils and London boroughs to collect and detain stray dogs, to return them to their owners or find them a suitable home or have them humanely destroyed if necessary and to enforce the existing requirement to wear a collar and tag in a public place. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has also announced more flexible powers to make byelaws to prevent dog fouling and to control dogs in certain public areas.

In view of the widespread public concern about straying and fouling we want to encourage local authorities to act on these provisions as soon as possible. Many authorities already employ dog wardens and I would encourage others to follow their example and make greater use of their existing powers. We will be holding discussions with the local authority associations and other interested parties about the timing and additional resource implications of implementing the new duties and powers.

Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reply to the report from the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities on "Paying for Pollution—Civil Liability for Damage Caused by Waste" (HL paper 84-1).

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 7 December 1990]: The report is to advise the House of Lords on questions of policy or principle and the advisability of debate and the Committee Chairman, Lord Nathan, has now tabled a motion for such a debate. We have already told him that we shall be looking at the report in relation to the draft directive and our further development of policies in this field. We would, of course, contribute to any debate.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the EC proposal for a Council regulation on the supervision and control of shipments of waste within, into and out of the European Community [Com(90)415 Final-SYN 305] published on 10 October.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 7 December 1990]: The Department will submit an explanatory memorandum to Parliament on this proposal in the near future.

Cost Recovery Charges

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent meetings have been held between Ministers or officials of his Department and representatives of the Engineering Employers Federation concerning cost recovery charges being introduced under the Environmental Protection Act.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 7 December 1990]: Representatives of the Engineering Employers Federation have recently had meetings with both the Minister of State and with officials of the Department to discuss implementation of integrated pollution control under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, including cost recovery charges.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the oversight that will be conducted by his Department over income earned by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and local authorities from granting of industrial operating licences for cost recovery under the Environmental Protection Act.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 7 December 1990]: The cost recovery charges to be made under the Environmental Protection Act by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) and by local authorities for air pollution control are set by the Secretary of State for the Environment with the approval of the Treasury. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's finances are scrutinised through the annual MINIS review of the Department's operation; and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will publish a report on income from charges at the end of each financial year. Local authorities will be required to make annual returns on income from pollution control charges, and the Department will publish a digest of this information.

Business in the Environment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he (a) last met and (b) next expects to meet the chairman of the Business in the Environment group; and what matters were or are expected to be discussed.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 7 December 1990]: My right hon. Friend, then Secretary of State, last met the chairman of Business in the Environment on 8 November 1990 during the launch of the publication, "Your Business and the Environment: An Executive Guide". My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside has agreed that a further meeting should take place in the new year, at which various business and environment issues will be discussed.

Fire and Civil Defence (Yorkshire)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the South Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority on his proposed financial settlement for 1991-92; what consideration he has given to those representations; if he will publish details of those representations; and if he will make a statement on the implications of his proposals for the fire service in South Yorkshire.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 7 December 1990]: We have received a number of representations from the South Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority on our proposals for the revenue support grant settlement for 1991-92, including those put to my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, when he met a delegation from the authority on 27 November. It is for the authority to make public its representations if it so chooses.

We are proposing to increase the authority's standard spending assessment by £3·2 million to £25·7 million, which we believe to be an appropriate assessment of the costs of providing the fire service in South Yorkshire. We shall carefully consider all the representations received before taking our decisions on the settlement.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will propose legislation under which accountancy firms would be prevented from writing up board minutes and then auditing the same.

Mr. Redwood: I see no reason to do so. Under existing legislation, a person who is an officer of a company—or a partner or employee of an officer—is prohibited from being appointed an auditor of the company. Moreover, under the Companies Act 1989 the Secretary of State will be able to recognise a supervisory body for auditors only if the body appears to him to have adequate rules and practices designed to ensure that company audit work is conducted properly and with integrity, and that persons are not appointed as company auditors in circumstances in which they have any interest likely to conflict with the proper conduct of the audit.

Water Pollution

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make it his policy to propose legislation under which all shareholders would be made aware of the amount of waste discharged by companies into the rivers and sea.

Mr. Redwood: No. It would be unreasonably burdensome to require companies to provide such information. Companies are best placed to decide, in the light of their individual circumstances, whether this information is likely to be of interest to their shareholders and other users of their reports and accounts.

Public Accountability

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has taken any steps to increase public accountability of the bodies listed in section 389 of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Redwood: Part II of the Companies Act 1989, which establishes a new supervisory system for the control and regulation of auditors, sets out clearly the standards which the bodies, seeking recognition as supervisory bodies, must meet.

Good Will

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether his Department will issue guidance on the accounting treatment for good will.

Mr. Redwood: No. The Accounting Standards Board is currently considering the responses to the exposure draft proposing a revised standard on accounting for good will.

Consumer Credit Act

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has for revising the Consumer Credit Act to ensure that (a) advance payments are held in trust and not treated as company assets and (b) contracts end automatically with liquidation.

Mr. Leigh: My right hon. Friend has no proposals for such legislation.

Price Level Accounting

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will recommend a system of price level accounting to major public limited companies.

Mr. Redwood: No. The role of current values in financial reporting is one of the subjects that the Accounting Standards Board will address in the course of its consideration of responses to the exposure draft on accounting for fixed assets and revaluations.

Innovation and Technology Transfer

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department is planning to hold any events in the northern region of England to publicise the EC's SPRINT programme.

Mr. Leigh: National publicity material available from DTI regional offices contains SPRINT information and local awareness events are often organised by them. EC and departmental initiatives are publicised at such events; however, no specific SPRINT event has been planned in the north-east.

A national "SPRINT roadshow" was widely publicised and run at venues reflecting the degree of interest shown; the north of England show took place in Manchester on 5 December 1990.

I was pleased to note the new SPRINT award concerning RTC—North in Sunderland.

EC Financial Directives

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in negotiations on the terms of the investment services directive; and what issues remain to be determined.

Mr. Redwood: There have been many meetings of officials under the Italian presidency on this important market-opening measure. Ministers have considered it twice at ECOFIN.

The main area of political controversy centres on the proposal, originally put forward by France, that certain transactions be confined to "regulated" markets. This was discussed at the meetings of the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers which I attended on 19 November and 3 December. It will be discussed further at ECOFIN on 17 December. The United Kingdom Government are opposed to the principle of such a restriction. Whatever is proposed must not compromise the ability of investors anywhere in the Community to choose how to invest their money.

Other matters subject to negotiation include:

whether members of the professions, appointed representatives and sole traders (natural persons) should be included in the scope of the directive;

the inclusion of conduct of business principles;

whether banks should have direct access to membership of stock exchanges; and whether certain rules governing the conduct of business should be disapplied to inter-professional dealing.

The Government will continue to press hard in the negotiations to achieve the best possible outcome on the directive as a whole for United Kingdom investment firms, United Kingdom investors and financial markets.

Building Works

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish tables showing (a) the number of new buildings, (b) the amount spent on new buildings, (c) the amount spent on repairs and maintenance and (d) the amount spent on building renovation by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 5 December 1990]: The Department periodically gives up buildings and takes on others in response to lease conditions and operational needs. Some buildings are new and some are taken over from previous tenants. The number of new buildings taken on to the estate is not readily available.

Information is also not readily available to distinguish major project expenditure in new buildings from that on renovation of existing buildings. However, since 1 April 1988 total expenditure by the Department on major projects for both purposes has been:

	£'000s
1988-89	17,784
1989-90	29,858
[1]1990-91	39,800

[1] Estimate.

Before 1 April 1988 the Department of the Environment Property Services Agency was responsible for major project expenditure in buildings occupied by the Department of the Trade and Industry.

There has been a progressive transfer of responsibility for repair and maintenance expenditure from the Department of the Environment Property Services Agency/Property Holdings to the Department of Trade and Industry with a particularly large transfer occurring in 1990-91 related to the division of the civil estate. The coverage of departmental expenditure is not therefore on a consistent basis over the period. However, expenditure on repairs and maintenance delegated to the Department over the last five years has been as follows:

	£000s
1986-87	2,477
1987-88	2,857
1988-89	4,771
1989-90	4,710
1990-91	[1]10,713

[1] Estimate.

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 5 December 1990]: Information about the number and levels of remuneration of people appointed to non-departmental public bodies is contained in the annual publication "Public Bodies". A copy of the current issue is held by the House of Commons Library, and "Public Bodies 1990" is expected to be published later this month.

The other information requested is not kept centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

USSR (Food)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what food aid has been sent to the Soviet Union by the United Kingdom in the past month; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy to distribute the EEC food surpluses as urgent aid to the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will meet the Soviet Union Foreign Minister to discuss what assistance he can give to solve Russia's food shortages; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will make it his policy to launch a food aid package to the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are concerned about the shortage of many foodstuffs in Soviet shops, and have discussed the problem with the Soviet authorities and with our European partners. There will be further discussion of Soviet economic problems at the European Council in Rome on 13 and 14 December. Where a real need exists and distribution can be assured, the European Community may be able to help with food aid from intervention stocks. Following a good harvest in 1990, the shortages in certain Soviet cities are chiefly the result of distribution difficulties. We would like to help to tackle the underlying problems through technical assistance. Food distribution is a top priority for our know-how fund. A consortium of British companies is already conducting a survey of the food distribution system around Kiev which may have implications for other parts of the Soviet Union.

Antarctica

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the conclusions between the treaty parties that met in Santiago de Chile to discuss exploitation of minerals and environmental protection for Antarctica; and what conclusion was made on a percentage of the land mass to be used as a wildlife park.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The meeting, which was called by the United Kingdom and Chile, ended on 7 December. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss comprehensive measures for the protection of the Antarctic environment.

A communiqué will be issued by the conference secretariat in due course, a copy of which I will place in the Library of the House.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list the countries represented at the conference on Antarctica which support a ban of future mineral mining and those which do not do so.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Of the consultative parties to the Antarctic treaty, Australia, France, Belgium, Italy, New Zealand, Finland, Sweden and Peru supported the call for a total ban on mining; the remaining 18 consultative parties (Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Ecuador, Germany, India, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, China, Poland, South Korea, South Africa, Spain, USSR, USA, United Kingdom and Uruguay) did not.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he now supports a permanent ban on mineral mining in Antarctica.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Our primary objective is to achieve a return to consensus within the Antarctic treaty system. There remain differing views on how best to achieve this, and we remain prepared to discuss the options. We do not believe that a permanent ban on mineral activity will achieve a consensus which is rational and scientifically based.

Mr. Alois Brunner

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether, since the renewal of diplomatic relations between the United Kingdom and Syria, he has consulted his ministerial counterparts in France, Germany and Austria to ensure that Alois Brunner, who now lives in Syria, is tried for war crimes;

(2) what representations he intends to make to the Syrian Government to ensure that Alois Brunner is tried for war crimes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom has no special responsibility in this matter. We have not been approached for assistance by the Governments mentioned by the hon. and learned Gentleman.

Guatemala

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made concerning killings and disappearances in Guatemala, in particular those listed by Amnesty International.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We and our EC partners have regularly made clear to the Guatemalan Government our serious concern about human rights abuses. In the past year, British Ministers have raised human rights three times with Guatemalan Ministers, and our ambassador has raised the plight of street children. He and his EC colleagues have also made representations about the shootings at Santiago de Atitlan on 2 December.

Overseas Electors

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the ministerial and departmental visits made overseas in 1990 in connection with the promotion of the changes in the rights of overseas electors; what, in each case, was the cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No ministerial or departmental visits were made overseas in connection with the publicity arrangements for the rights of overseas electors under the Representation of the People Act 1989.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Eastern Europe

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much in aid and assistance to eastern Europe has been spent and committed in 1990-91; and what is the nature of each programme on which money is being expended.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of how know-how funding to Poland has been applied hitherto; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: A total of £5,020,848 has been spent under the know-how fund for eastern Europe since the beginning of the 1990-91 financial year. We expect to spend the full £15 million allocated for assistance to eastern Europe by the end of this financial year. As to the nature of the programmes on which money has been spent, I refer to the replies I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 14 March at column 236, for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Dr. Woodcock) on 13 June at column 213, for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) and for Hazel Grove (Sir T. Arnold) on 2 July at column 417, and to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 17 October at column 813. The additional activities approved since then under the know-how fund are as follows:

Environment and Development Conference

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what part the Overseas Development Administration is playing in the preparatory process for the United Nations conference on environment and development to be held in Brazil in 1992.

Mrs. Chalker: We have contributed US$25,000 to the voluntary fund established to finance participation by developing countries in the preparations for the conference. We have offered to help finance the preparation of national reports from Indonesia, Pakistan and Zimbabwe for the conference. Together with the Department of Trade and Industry we will be financing a study on technology transfer to help developing countries address environmental problems, with a focus on global warming. ODA officials played a full part in the first meeting of the preparatory committee for the conference in Nairobi in August, and will continue to do so at future meetings.

Angola

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the action the Government plan to take in support of the United Nations special relief programme for Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 6 December at column 204.

Malawi

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Malawi concerning adherence to the African charter on human and peoples' rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We welcome Malawi's ratification of the African charter on human and peoples' rights. But it is not for us to monitor any state's implementation of its provisions. It is for the commission provided by the charter to do this.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Malawi concerning the continuing detention without trial of Jack Mapanje; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We are concerned about Jack Mapanje's continued detention in Malawi and make frequent inquiries of the Malawian authorities about his case. Senior Malawian officials have recently told us that all cases of detention without trial are currently undergoing review.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Official Visits

25. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many visits he has made to the Duchy in the last fortnight.

Mr. Chris Patten: I visited the county palatine last month. I assure the hon. Member I shall be making plenty of further visits to it in the future.

HEALTH

Kidney Transplants

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider taking steps to institute a system of required requests for kidney donation in order to increase the number of kidneys available for transplant.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government have initiated an audit of all intensive care units in England to assess potential for organ procurement, including kidneys. The results so far do not suggest that failure to request is a serious problem in England. A much more significant reason for the loss of suitable organs was refusal by relatives. We are carrying out a programme of national publicity to address this problem.

Head Lice

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the incidence of head louse infection in British schools for each of the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 26 April at columns 293-94.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the percentage of those waiting for non-urgent operations who wait longer than (a) one year, (b) six months and (c) two years in Leeds Eastern health authority and Leeds Western health authority;

(2) what has been the rise in the number of people waiting for non-urgent operations as a percentage and as a number in (a) Leeds Eastern health authority, (b) Leeds Western health authority and (c) the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is given in the table.

In-patient waiting lists (surgical specialties)

	Total number at 31 March	percentage change	At 31 March, percentage of cases on list waiting:
			6-12 months	12-23 months	over 24 months
Leeds Eastern
1989	5,165	+0·1	18·2	17·9	8·0
1990	5,169		16·8	17·6	9·0
Leeds Western
1989	4,596	−8·0	21·1	17·1	9·5
1990	4,230		23·5	14·1	9·0
England
1989	595,033	+1·3	22·8	17·1	12·4
1990	602,850		23·3	12·3	10·5

Since 1979 the number of in-patients treated in all specialties has increased by 25 per cent. in Leeds Eastern, by 41 per cent. in Leeds Western and by nearly 25 per cent. in England as a whole.

For information for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Romanian Children

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many Romanian children adopted or fostered by British people are currently in the care of local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We know of no such children who are currently in the care of local authorities.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received any representations from residential or nursing home owners with respect to the European Commission's social action programme, Council document 8073/90, about the organisation of working time.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are aware of the independent sector's concern about this directive, and have received comments on behalf of private hospital, nursing home and residential care home proprietors.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will estimate the average number of weekly working hours of the average home-worker including overtime in (a) local authority residential homes, (b) private residential homes and (c) private nursing homes;

(2) what is his estimate of the number of employees in residential and nursing homes who (a) have a minimum rest period of 11 consecutive hours in every 24 hours, (b) work two consecutive full-time night shifts, (c) work more than eight night hours of every 24 hours, on average, and (d) have regular, free health assessments when working on night shifts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has now assessed the implications of the European Commission's social action programme concerning the organisation of working time, Council document 8073/90, for the level of staffing ratio, organisation and running of residential and nursing homes.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A draft EC directive on the organisation of working time is currently under negotiation in Brussels. The Government are considering the implications of the directive for the United Kingdom.

Whitley Council

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the total number of staff involved in servicing the General Whitley Council and its committees, the annual cost of running the council, and the number of national health service staff covered by the General Whitley Council; and if he will give similar figures for the review bodies on doctors' and dentists' remuneration and nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The General Whitley Council is responsible for negotiating conditions of service for some 937,000 staff in the national health service, including 590,000 whose pay is covered by the review bodies. Servicing the work of the council and its committees involves 9·5 whole-time equivalent staff of the Department at an approximate annual cost of £153,000. The pay of the non-review body staff is negotiated by the various functional Whitley councils and related negotiating bodies.

Questions about the servicing of the review bodies are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to control campylobacter infection to prevent infection entering kitchens and food manufacturing premises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Attention to good food hygiene practice will help to prevent all forms of foodborne infection.

Guidance for the consumer is given in the leaflet "Food Safety: A Guild from Her Majesty's Government" copies of which are available in the Library. Food manufacturers are responsible for the microbiological safety of their processes. This responsibility is clearly set out in the Food Safety Act 1990.

Childbirth

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the sample of 173,000 births in England in 1988-89 referred to in his answer of 22 October, Official Report, columns 33-34, which were used to estimate induction rates, instrumental delivery rates and Caesarean section rates were a random sample of births in all regions and districts of England in each month of 1988-89; and how many of these records did not have information recorded about (a) onset of labour or (b) method of delivery.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 7 December 1990]: The 173,000 records were those submitted by health authorities with method of delivery and method of onset of labour recorded. Due to teething problems with new data collections some health authorities were unable to submit a fully coded record for each delivery. The available data are thus not a random sample, but checks showed that the information given in the answer of 22 October at columns 33-34 was consistent with earlier figures.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

University Research Projects

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has received from the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on the Hanham report on the costing of university research projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Universities have responded positively to the Hanham report, improving their cost-recovery procedures in the light of its recommendations. In the light of experience and with the assistance of other parties concerned, the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals is further developing the costing principles for research projects.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to assist local education authorities to meet their redefined duties to provide speech therapy for children who need to learn to communicate by speech, following the 1989 Court of Appeal ruling in R v. Lancashire county council ex parte CM.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department's circular 22/89, which was published on 29 September 1989, reminds local education authorities that in the case to which my hon. Friend refers, the Court of Appeal ruled that speech therapy could be considered either educational or non-educational provision. However, the ruling does not diminish health authorities' general responsibilities under the National Health Service Reorganisation Act 1973 to provide speech therapy, and it does not mean that education authorities are under any legal obligation to fund speech therapy.

Agriculture and Food Research

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the amount of money his Department gave to fund (a) arable crops research, (b) animal health, (c) animal physiology and genetics, (d) engineering research, (e) food research, (f) grassland and environmental research, (g) horticultural research and (h) plant science research at Agricultural and Food Research Council institutes since 1980; and what are his estimates for 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department funds the research councils, including the Agricultural and Food Research Council, through grants in aid from the science budget. It is in general for councils to decide how to spend their total budgets.

The council has provided the following figures for expenditure of funds received from the science budget on the categories of research listed in the question for financial years 1987-88 to 1990-91, and for estimated expenditure in 1991-92 and 1992-93:

£s Million

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Arable Crops	6·0	7·6	7·4	7·2	7·9	7·8
Animal Health	3·6	4·0	8·8	9·5	11·1	10·1
Animal Physiology and Genetics	6·3	6·7	8·1	8·8	9·6	9·3
Engineering	0·8	0·8	1·1	1·3	1·5	1·4
Food	6·2	6·5	7·9	9·1	14·8	10·5
Grassland and Environmental	2·2	3·6	3·6	4·4	3·2	3·1
Horticulture	2·9	2·7	3·1	2·8	3·2	3·2
Plant Science	6·9	6·2	6·8	7·8	9·2	8·7
Total	34·9	38·1	46·8	50·9	60·5	54·1

It is not possible, without disproportionate work, to provide strictly comparable figures for the years 1980-81 to 1986-87 because of the major restructuring of AFRC institutes which has taken place and which is still continuing. In those years, the council spent science budget funds as follows:

million

	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
Animals	11·0	13·8	13·9	14·0
Arable Crops	8·7	9·7	12·5	18·4
Horticulture	2·1	3·4	6·0
Engineering	1·1	1·6	1·0	0·6
Food Science	2·6	3·2	2·0	3·2
Total	25·5	31·7	35·4	36·2

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Plant Breeding	3·4	2·8	4·8
Crop Protection	4·6	4·5	5·9
Soils and Crop Nutrition	2·6	2·7	2·4
Crop Production	6·4	6·4	7·8
Animal Breeding	4·5	3·0	4·0
Animal Disease	4·9	4·1	4·1
Animal Nutrition	1·6	1·6	2·4
Animal Production	0·5	2·2	2·9
Food	3·3	5·3	5·5
Total	31·8	32·6	39·8

All figures represent the amounts paid to institutes for both recurrent and capital costs, including payments for major restructuring projects. Grants made to bodies other than AFRC institutes (such as universities) and central funds which have been used to support institute research (central administration, superannuation and so on) are not included.

Pupil Costs

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average cost of a place in (a) primary education, (b) secondary education, excluding sixth forms, (c) sixth forms and (d) further education.

Mr. Eggar: The latest available information is for financial year 1988-89. Net institutional expenditure per pupil in nursery and primary schools, for which separate figures are not collected centrally, was some £1,100. For secondary schools, for which figures for sixth form and other pupils are not collected separately, it was some £1,690. Net institutional expenditure per student in local education authority maintained establishments of further education, excluding polytechnics, was some £2,860.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science for what reasons grant-maintained schools are excluded from the requirement of section 26(9) of the Education Reform Act relating to duty to comply with a parent's preference as to school and the circumstances in which no prejudice is taken to arise.

Mr. Eggar: The provisions made in section 26(9) of the Education Reform Act relate to the Education Act 1980, which does not apply to grant-maintained schools.

Under section 83(1) of the 1988 Act the governing body of a grant-maintained school is required to fix as the number of pupils it intends to admit in any school year a number which is at least equal to the approved admission number.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science under which separate headings grant-maintained schools may apply for special purpose grant; in each case, what criteria or formulae are applied in determining the level of such grant; and what is the total sum available for such grant for 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: Schools may apply for four separate types of special purpose grant: SPG (development) or SPG(D); SPG (premises) or SPG(P); SPG (restructuring) or SPG(R); and SPG (VAT) or SPG(V).

SPG(D) is intended to mirror what the school might have received via educational support grant and local education authority training grants scheme towards the cost of management training, staff development and the implementation of the national curriculum and assessment arrangements. In 1991-92 each school will be entitled to receive up to £42 full-year equivalent per pupil.

SPG(P) is intended to meet the costs of premises insurance. It is payable up to a limit of £6,000 or 50 per cent. of the school's insurance premium, whichever is the lower figure.

SPG(R) is available to help with the costs of redundancy payments and other staff restructuring, where it can be demonstrated that the staffing changes are in the interests of the efficient operation of the school.

SPG(V) compensates for the payment of VAT on supplies and services, which grant-maintained schools, unlike local education authorities, may not claim back. It is available at a rate of 2·5 per cent. of a school's annual maintenance grant, with an appropriate deduction in the case of ex-county schools which on incorporation become eligible to receive rate relief as charities.

The total amount of special purpose grant available in 1991-92 will depend upon the number of grant-maintained schools in operation. That figure cannot be accurately predicted.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what special purpose grant payments have been made, or approved, under each heading to grant-maintained schools so far; and how much this represents per pupil.

Mr. Eggar: The only firm information available is for the financial year 1989-90. The total payments were:

1989-90	Total payments (£)
SPG(D)	183,956
SPG(P)	27,736
SPG(R)	11,823
SPG(V)	231,313
Total	454,828

Taking pupil numbers as at January 1990, these payments in total represent a full-year equivalent payment of £59·35 per pupil.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to amend rule 909 to reduce the circumstances in which school playing fields may be sold.

Mr. Fallon: The Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981, Statutory Instrument No. 909, prescribe minimum standards for playing field provision at maintained schools. The forthcoming review of the school premises regulations will cover the appropriateness of these standards in the context of current and future educational practice, and of securing better use of school grounds.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the number and size of school playing fields that have been sold in the past 11 years.

Mr. Fallon: The information needed to provide the estimate requested by the hon. Member is not available centrally.

Physical Education Colleges

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many physical education colleges have closed in the past 11 years;

(2) if he will make it his policy to take the steps necessary to transfer responsibility for the closure of physical education colleges to his Department.

Mr. Fallon: As no freestanding colleges of physical education are still in existence, the question of responsibility for their closure does not arise. Nonington college, Kent, has closed; most of the other physical education colleges have merged with other establishments to become part of polytechnics or colleges of higher education. These institutions now offer PE as a subject specialism within their initial teacher training courses (secondary phase). Anstey college, Birmingham, was absorbed into Birmingham polytechnic in which PE is no longer an option within initial teacher training for the secondary phase.

London Schools Athletic Championships

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the reasons the London schools athletic championships did not take place this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have received no representations on this issue. However, I understand that the London schools athletic championships were not held this year because the schools involved were unable to make the necessary commitment to this event. As a result, the London Schools Athletic Association has decided to organise next year's championships on an inter-borough basis.

Sport

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many schoolchildren and young persons participated in sporting activities in 1979 and 1989; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the average amount of time devoted to sport and recreation in schools.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not available centrally. The Government fully recognise the importance of sport in schools. The national curriculum working group on physical education has been asked to take account of the contribution which competitive sport can make to the curriculum as a whole. The group's interim report is due to be submitted by the end of the year.

Teacher Training

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide the latest available estimated cost to train a teacher.

Mr. Fallon: In polytechnics and colleges the estimated annual mean level of public funding per student enrolled on education courses in 1989-90 was around £3,500. The same figure was taken by the Universities Funding Council as the maximum at which it would fund each university undergraduate teacher training place in its recent bidding exercise.

Teacher Appraisal

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state the outcome of the recent consultations on school teacher appraisal.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: [pursuant to his reply, 7 December 1990, c. 213]: I am grateful for the full and considered responses to the consultation which my predecessor launched in September.

Most respondents wanted appraisal to be a duty on employers—and a duty and an entitlement for teachers. I agree. Appraisal will enhance the professional skills of teachers, and hence the education of their pupils. It should become part of the everyday working life of teachers, as in other occupations. Appraisal will assist teachers to realise their potential and carry out their duties more effectively. It affords parents an assurance of the quality of the teaching which their children will receive.

Accordingly my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I intend to introduce regulations to require local education authorities and the governors of grant-maintained schools to arrange for the regular appraisal of all teachers whom they employ. We shall need to bring that requirement in gradually because the teacher force in England and Wales is 440,000 strong. But my target is that every teacher now in service should have had his first appraisal by the end of the 1994-95 school year.

The recommendations of the national steering group on the aims of appraisal and on the broad components of the appraisal process command wide support. The regulations and the circular which will accompany them will build on that foundation. Appraisal will take place on a regular two-year cycle. At its heart will lie an observation by a senior colleague of the teacher's work in the classroom. This will be followed by an interview in which the appraiser will discuss the appraisee's professional development with him, and set targets for future action.

I envisage that the regulations will enable the chairman of the school governors to see on request the targets set for teachers at the school. Disciplinary procedures will remain separate but may draw on appraisal records. In advising governing bodies on the exercise of their responsibilities for remuneration head teachers will be able to draw on relevant information from appraisal, along with other factors.

I consider that the national steering group substantially overestimated the cost of introducing appraisal. I shall support expenditure of £10 million on appraisal in 1991-92, and of at least £10 million in 1992-93. Final decisions about 1992-93 and later years will be taken in due time.

My Department has today invited the Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions to consider an amendment to teachers' conditions of service which would oblige teachers to participate in appraisal with a framework prescribed by the regulations. I shall, as required by section 49 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986, consult again before making the regulations.

DEFENCE

RAF Flying Accidents

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the nature and circumstances of the flying accident involving a Royal Air Force Jaguar aircraft on 12 September.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: On 12 September 1990, a Jaguar aircraft from RAF Coltishall on a routine training sortie crashed into a sandbank in the Solway firth. Tragically, the pilot was killed.

A board of inquiry has been convened, and a summary of its findings will be published.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the nature and circumstances of the flying accident involving a Royal Air Force Tornado aircraft on 18 October.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: On 18 October 1990, a RAF Tornado aircraft crashed while approaching to land at Tabuk air force base in Saudi Arabia. The aircrew both ejected, but suffered major injuries.

A board of inquiry has been convened, and a summary of its findings will be published.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions since 1985 external stores have been inadvertently released from Royal Air Force aircraft in flight.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Eight, excluding occasions where weapons were released inadvertently within a weapons range danger area.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the nature and circumstances of the flying accident involving a Royal Air Force Jaguar aircraft on 13 November.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: On 13 November 1990, a RAF Jaguar aircraft on a low-level training flight flew into a ridge in the desert in Saudi Arabia, some 100 miles south of Bahrain. Tragically, the pilot was killed.

A board of inquiry has been convened, a summary of its findings will be published.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the nature and circumstances of the flying accident involving a Royal Air Force Harrier aircraft on 17 October.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: On 17 October 1990, a RAF Harrier aircraft experienced what appeared to be engine problems shortly after take-off from Alborg air force base in Denmark. The pilot ejected and the aircraft crashed into a field. The pilot suffered minor injuries.

A board of inquiry has been convened, and a summary of its findings will be published.

Low Flying

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will maintain central records of confirmed infringements of United Kingdom low-flying system regulations by foreign aircrews.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if foreign aircrew found to have infringed the regulations governing the United Kingdom low-flying system are subject to disciplinary proceedings under the Air Force Act 1955.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying movements were booked in low-flying area 17 in 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is not the general practice to publish such information relating to individual low-flying areas.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those low-flying areas where a limit is imposed on the number of aircraft permitted within the area at any one time; and what was the date of introduction of the limit in each case.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Limits on the number of aircraft allowed at any one time in low-flying areas 7 and 17 were introduced in 1987 and in low-flying area 12 earlier this year.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Royal Air Force pilots are permitted to fly low level over the United Kingdom while wearing a patch over one eye.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the special circumstances in which Royal Air Force aircrew may be authorised to fly at heights less than those set out in the United Kingdom military low flying handbook, as provided in section 51*(b)* of the Air Force Act 1955, and set out in Joint Services Publication 318.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have nothing to add to the reply which my hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mr. Neubert) gave to the hon. Member on 19 April 1989 at column 113.

Gower Peninsula

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now reply to the letter sent to him on 12 October by the hon. Member for Gower regarding the potential hazards associated with leisure flying and low-flying aircraft over the Gower peninsula.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have written to the hon. Member.

Iraq

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will request from the French Minister of Defence a full list of all weapons, aircraft, missiles and munitions supplied by French companies to Iraq prior to 2 August 1990.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am satisfied that we are making appropriate inquiries about Iraqi military equipment.

Sri Lankans (Training)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Sri Lankan personnel have been on military training courses in the United Kingdom in each of the last four years; what advisory visits have been made in the last four years under the auspices of the directorate of military assistance overseas: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Specific details on foreign students attending military training courses in the United Kingdom are normally confidential between the Governments concerned. I can, however, confirm that members of the Sri Lankan armed forces have attended a number of courses in the United Kingdom given by the three services. No advisory visits under the auspices of the directorate of military assistance overseas have been made to Sri Lanka in the past four years.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Late Sittings

35. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he has any plans to reduce the amount of business taken by the House after midnight; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: In an ideal world the House would not often need to meet after midnight and I will consider any ideas as to how we might achieve this. However, any move towards this ideal while still securing the passage of business will require the co-operation and self-discipline of all hon. Members.

Shopping Facilities

36. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Lord President of the Council what consideration is being given to the provision of shopping facilities for essential goods for the benefit of hon. Members and staff within the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. MacGregor: A small general shop run by the Refreshment Department and open to all Members and staff of the House is to be established in phase 1 of the new parliamentary buildings.

POLIS

37. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will ensure that all Members' offices have direct access to POLIS.

Mr. MacGregor: All right hon. and hon. Members are able to access POLIS through the Library's terminals. The Library will also arrange for any Member to have direct access to the POLIS service in his own office, so long as his computer equipment is compatible. I am now studying the fourth report of the Services Committee of last Session, on computer services for members, which recommended the installation of a new cable to facilitate Members' access to POLIS and other data services.

Procedural Changes

38. Mr. Butler: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he intends any review of the way in which Parliament manages its own affairs.

Mr. MacGregor: Significant changes in the management and decision-making structures of the House have been proposed in the report on "House of Commons Services", which was prepared for the House of Commons Commission by a team led by Sir Robin Ibbs, and was published on 28 November as House of Commons paper 38 of this Session. My immediate concern, after consulting the House, will be to ensure the implementation of the main proposals in that report.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will consider taking steps to include a note of the total number of oral questions submitted to any one Department at the foot of the questions listed on the Order Paper.

Mr. MacGregor: I have no plans to do so. But if my hon. Friend wishes to pursue the matter he might care to raise it with the Procedure Committee which may shortly begin an inquiry into all aspects of parliamentary questions.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many oral questions were tabled for answer by the (a) Secretary of State for Scotland on 21 November, (b) Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on 22 November and (c) Secretary of State for Wales on 3 December.

Mr. MacGregor: The number is as follows:

Oral questions tabled

	Number
The Secretary of State for Scotland	51
The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland	31
The Secretary of State for Wales	28

ENERGY

Electricity Industry (Coal Supply)

3. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss future contracts with the electricity industry.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Disconnections

5. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussion he has had with the new power companies as to the policy they will follow before any cut-offs of power will take place for the non-payment of electricity bills.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In recognition that some consumers may experience genuine difficulties paying their bills, the licences issued to the public electricity suppliers have strengthened the protections against disconnection offered to such consumers. The Director General of Electricity Supply is responsible for overseeing the implementation of these safeguards.

Aberthaw Power Station

7. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss the future of Aberthaw power station.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry. However, the future of Aberthaw power station is a matter for National Power.

Renewable Energy

10. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has for the encouragement of wind energy sources.

Mr. Moynihan: I intend to make provision reserved for wind energy projects in an order under the non-fossil fuel obligation next year. My Department is pursuing an expanding programme of research, development and demonstration on wind energy in collaboration with industry.

Energy Efficiency

14. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress is being made by the new ministerial group on energy efficiency in devising public sector energy-saving initiatives.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The ministerial group on energy efficiency is working to spread energy efficiency practices throughout the public sector by providing encouragement, advice and technical guidance and by good example.

Electricity Prices

15. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by how much domestic electricity prices have increased since April 1987; and if he will consider improvement to the arrangements for the protection of electricity consumers to enable effective monitoring of price changes.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Domestic electricity prices have risen in real terms by less than 1 per cent. a year since April 1987. The Director General of Electricity Supply has statutory responsibility for protecting the interests of electricity consumers on a range of issues including prices.

Dounreay

16. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the future of Dounreay.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by the former Secretary of State for Energy, my right hon. Friend the Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Parkinson), on 21 July 1988.

Unleaded Petrol

17. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the percentage of petrol retailing outlets in the United Kingdom selling unleaded petrol; and what are the comparable figures in other members of the European Community.

Mr. Moynihan: The United Kingdom Petroleum Industry Association estimates that at the end of September 1990, 98 per cent. of the filling stations in the United Kingdom sold premium unleaded petrol. Comparable figures in the European Community were West Germany, Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg 100 per cent., Denmark 85 per cent., Italy 64 per cent., Ireland 50 per cent., France 40 per cent., Spain 19 per cent., Greece 11 per cent. and Portugal 4 per cent.

23. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what market share was taken by unleaded petrol in 1989 in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other European Community countries.

Mr. Moynihan: The market share of unleaded petrol increased rapidly in the United Kingdom during 1989—from 4 per cent. in January to 28 per cent. by December, an average of 19 per cent. for that year. The United Kingdom share has subsequently increased to 38 per cent. in October this year.

The United Kingdom Petroleum Industry Association estimates that in 1989 the market share of unleaded petrol in other European Community countries was as follows: West Germany 59 per cent., Denmark 57 per cent., Netherlands 37 per cent., Luxembourg 21 per cent., Belgium 19 per cent. Eire 7 per cent., France and Italy 2 per cent. and Spain and Portugal 0·5 per cent. Sales of unleaded petrol in Greece were negligible.

Nuclear Fuel Reprocessing

18. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the chairman of Nuclear Electric regarding the company's policy on reprocessing spent nuclear fuel.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the chairman regularly to discuss a variety of issues.

United Kingdom Continental Shelf

19. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many exploration and appraisal wells had been drilled on the United Kingdom continental shelf by the end of November.

Mr. Moynihan: The figure to the end of November is not yet available. Up to 25 November, 195 new exploration and appraisal wells had been started in the United Kingdom continental shelf since the beginning of this year, already the highest annual figure since United Kingdom continental shelf activity began in 1964.

Uranium

20. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the world's resources of uranium.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department does not make an independent assessment of the world's resources of uranium. Regular estimates are, however, published by a number of bodies and I refer my hon. Friend to the 1990 edition of the OECD/IAEA publication "Uranium Resources, Production and Demand". This indicates that known and estimated reserves are expected to be sufficient for about 75 to 175 years.

Public Buildings (Energy Conservation)

21. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of schools, clinics and other public buildings is commissioned, designed, built and put into use without an energy use and conservation evaluation being made.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This information is not held centrally.

Energy Technology Support Unit

11. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will increase the funding of the energy technology support unit.

Mr. Moynihan: The energy technology support unit provides programme management for my Department's renewable energy R and D programme and part of its energy efficiency programme. Provision for both these programmes next year has been increased with a consequent increase in funding for the energy technology support unit.

Electricity Privatisation

22. Mr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the level of pre-registration for the sale of the 12 regional electricity companies.

Mr. Wakeham: By midnight on 14 November 1990 approximately 7·3 million applications to register had been received by the electricity share information office.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is his estimate of the percentage of shares in each of the 12 regional electricity companies held by residents of the home region of each company;

(2) what is his most up-to-date estimate of the numbers of applicants to be shareholders in the 12 regional electricity companies resident in the franchise area served by each company.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information is not available in the form requested.

Offshore Installations (Safety)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what exemptions he plans to propose to European law on offshore safety in respect of British installations after 1992.

Mr. Moynihan: None.

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service for employees within his Department, stating (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department does not itself provide an occupational health service for its employees. Along with all other civil service departments and agencies, my Department has access to the services of the civil service occupational health service which employs some 100 fully qualified occupational health professionals, including doctors, nurses and hygiene and safety advisers. It operates via a network of regional offices throughout the United Kingdom.

The total number of employees in my Department was 1,067 at 1 December 1990.

Offshore Oil Industry

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress he made in helping to promote the United Kingdom offshore oil industry during his recent visit to south America.

Mr. Moynihan: During my visit to south America in October to promote the export interests of the United Kingdom offshore supplies industry I met Government Ministers and senior oil company personnel in both Mexico and Brazil, where I also attended the Rio oil and gas show to lend my support to the British companies exhibiting there and to deliver a paper on offshore safety. I hope that my visit will lead to greater opportunities for British industry to win export orders in these markets.

EMPLOYMENT

Pentobarbitone

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the Health and Safety Executive has examined working practices involving the use of pentobarbitone; and if he will issue guidelines concerning its safe use.

Mr. Forth: No studies of working practices specifically involving the use of pentobarbitone have been undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive. Existing statutory provisions, and guidance under those provisions, are comprehensive and there are no plans to issue specific guidelines for this substance.

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service for employees within his Department, stating (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mr. Jackson: The Department of Employment is served by the civil service occupational health service which employs some 100 fully qualified occupational health professionals including doctors, nurses and hygiene and safety advisers. It operates via a network of regional offices throughout the United Kingdom.

Working Hours

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what restrictions on working hours (a) during the day and (b) during the night are contained in the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 places a number of general duties on employers, including "the provision and maintenance of plant and safe systems of work that are, so far as is reasonably practicable, safe and without risk to health".

Working time arrangements in so far as they affect health and safety adversely are subject to this general duty.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the provisions of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 which apply to workers in residential and nursing homes.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 does not distinguish between workers in one type of premise or another. Therefore, all the provisions of the Act which apply to workers generally apply equally to workers in residential and nursing homes.

New Businesses

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new businesses have been set up since 1981 in (a) Amber Valley and (b) the east midlands.

Mr. Forth: The information requested, based on VAT registration data, is given in the table. Early indications for 1990 from data collected by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are that in the United Kingdom as a whole there continues to be a substantial net increase.

VAT registrations, deregistrations and net change: end-1981 to end-1989

	Registrations	Deregistrations	Net change (percentage)
Amber Valley (local authority district)	2,900	2,400	19·3
East midlands	104,900	83,100	23·8

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many recipients of the disability working allowance will be working for (a) between 16 and 24 hours and (b) 24 hours or more a week.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that once the benefit is established about 50,000 people will receive disability working allowance at any given point. We expect that about a quarter of these will be working fewer than 24 hours a week.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people would gain if the disability living allowance were to include (a) a diet component and (b) a heating component for those disabled people who incur extra costs.

Mr. Scott: The numbers who might gain from changes to the proposed disability living allowance would depend on the conditions of entitlement. Very substantial numbers of those people who have extra costs associated with either diet or heating are already receiving help through the existing disability costs benefits and more will do so with the introduction of the new lower rates of the disability living allowance.

The proposed mobility and care components will deliver extra resources to people with a wide range of needs in addition to care and mobility.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many (a) single people living with their parents, (b) single people living in their own home, (c) married people without children and (d) married people with children will receive disability working allowance; and if he will estimate the average weekly payment for each group (a) to (d).

Mr. Scott: Estimates of the likely case load of disability working allowance can be only tentative. On this basis, we estimate that about half the people who get DWA will be single and half will have a partner. Around half the single claimants will be living in the household of their parents or in the household of another person. About a third of recipients will have children and most of these will have partners. We estimate that the average payment will be a little under £35 a week, but it is not possible to estimate average payments for different catetories of recipients with confidence.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the increase in expenditure in gross and net terms if the capital limit for the disability working allowance of £8,000 was (a) removed altogether, (b) raised to £24,000 and (c) raised to £16,000; and how many people would become entitled to disability working allowance as a result.

Mr. Scott: Given the small numbers involved and the uncertainty about the characteristics of this group, it is not possible to estimate with confidence either the gross or net cost of raising or removing the upper limit.

Purchasing

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were his Department's (a) best and (b) worst purchases made in the current month as measured against the Government's supply index.

Mr. Jack: I regret that this information is not available. The Department is a subscriber to the Government supply index (GSI), and we are considering how we might develop our use of this system to give us improved information. The GSI has proved useful in promoting value-for-money awareness in the Department, but to date, limited directly attributable savings have been achieved.

Pensions

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of uprating the basic state pension by £13 for a single person and £20 for a couple.

Miss Widdecombe: The cost of uprating the retirement pension in this way would be approximately £6 billion. There would also be an additional loss to the national insurance fund of £1 billion as a result of the consequential rise in contribution thresholds and limits. Such an increase implies a rise in the national insurance contributions paid by an employee on average earnings of approximately £2·78 per week and £5·34 for his employer.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his reply to the right hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham, Official Report, 21 November, column 131, if he will now tabulate figures for basic retirement pension applications and awards in 1989 and in 1979, showing how many applications were received in each year; and how many were (a) turned down and (b) awarded at less than the full rate of basic retirement pension, due to (i) insufficient contributions, (ii) receipt of another benefit, (iii) deferral and (iv) other reasons.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the table. Figures are not available on the number of instances where there was no entitlement to retirement pension, where the claimant chose to defer his award or where the award was later reduced because of an overlapping benefit.

A Date (6 months to)	B Total claims	C Total awards	D Number at less than full rate
November 1979	371,938	347,000	39,520
March 1989	317,011	244,940	50,340

Note: Instances where the payment of retirement pension was reduced because of an overlapping benefit are included as full awards in column C.

Industrial Disablement Benefit

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date hard metal disease was prescribed for industrial disablement benefit purposes; if he will list the medical conditions which are treated as pneumoconiosis for industrial disablement benefit purposes, and in relation to each disease when it was first so treated; and in relation to the lung conditions which are treated as pneumoconiosis for industrial disablement benefit purposes, what publicity has been issued by the Department of Social Security to inform potential claimants about their potential eligibility.

Mr. Scott: Fibrosis of the lung caused by dust from hard metal is covered by the definition of pneumoconiosis which, for the purposes of industrial injuries disablement benefit, includes fibrosis of the lungs due to silica dust, asbestos dust or other dust. This definition was first included in the coal mining industry (pneumoconiosis) compensation scheme under the Workmen's Compensation Act 1943. Information is available in a number of departmental leaflets; leaflet N13 in particular refers to lung diseases caused by some dusts and fibres.

Disability

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether his Department has any plans to embark on on-going research work to determine the actual and potential costs of disability.

Mr. Scott: The OPCS surveys, and the family expenditure survey (FES) follow-up survey published earlier this year, have provided us with an unprecedented amount of information about both the actual and the potential costs of disability. We have no intention of commissioning further research at this stage, although we will keep the position under review.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children would receive each of the two mobility components of the disability living allowance if the lower age limit of five years was (a) removed altogether or (b) reduced to two years; and what the total expenditure would be in each case.

Mr. Scott: The number of potential beneficiaries from a reduction in the lower age limit for the mobility component cannot be predicted with any degree of certainty. Our estimates, based on analyses of the OPCS disability surveys, are that the abolition of the age limit would bring perhaps an additional 15,000 children on to the higher level of the mobility component and an additional 10,000 on to the lower level. The total cost would be about £35 million a year. A reduction in the age limit to two years would be likely to bring on slightly lower numbers of children, with a cost of about £30 million a year.

Medical Reports (Benefits)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security under what statutory authority people can be refused sight of medical reports on their person when such reports are obtained by his Department in respect of applications for discretionary benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no statutory authority. Medical reports are given in confidence and whether they can be released or not is governed by principles of common law.

Coal Workers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) shotsmen and (b) shotfirers who formerly worked in the coal industry have been tested for the effects of nitrogen oxide; of those tested, how many have received compensation; and if he will supply figures for each coalfield area in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available, but on 1 April 1989, some 20 people were estimated to be receiving industrial injuries disablement benefit because of poisoning by oxides of nitrogen.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether any persons suffering from Dupuytren's contracture as a direct result of employment in the coal industry are entitled to claim compensation.

Mr. Scott: I believe that this question relates to the condition of Dupuytren's contracture in which bands of increased fibrous tissue in the palm of the hand may result in a progressive curling over of one or more fingers. There is no firm evidence that this condition arises from any form of employment. It is not therefore recognised under the industrial injuries scheme as a prescribed disease.

Social Security Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what explanation he offers to persons willing to serve on social security appeal tribunals but whom he decides not to reappoint; what right of appeal against such refusal to reappoint exists; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what opportunities to attend training courses have been offered in each year since 1979 to members of the Leeds social security appeal tribunal; how many members have attended (a) all training courses and (b) no training courses in each of the last five years; and what importance he places on attendance at training courses when deciding reappointments to the tribunal;

(3) how many persons he has appointed in each year since 1979 to the Leeds social security appeal tribunal; what is the normal term of office; in how many cases since 1979 he has reappointed persons for further terms; and in how many cases since 1979 he has declined to reappoint a person who is willing to continue service;

(4) what reports he has received in the past five years about complaints made by members of the Leeds social security appeal tribunal concerning the conduct of hearings.

Miss Widdecombe: The responsibility for the appointment of members of social security appeal tribunals lies with the president of social security appeal tribunals and medical appeal tribunals, His Honour Judge Derek Holden, who is appointed by the Lord Chancellor. He has, however, provided me with the following information.

Tribunal members normally hold office for three years at a time, but the president may, at any time, terminate the appointment of any member. There is no right of appeal against the decision not to reappoint a person to a panel of members.

Since the president's office was created in 1984, training courses have been available to members of Leeds social security tribunal in 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989. Further courses are being arranged for 1991. Training records are kept for individual members but are not collated. Availability for training courses is regarded as an important factor when considering reappointments.

The number of persons appointed as members of the panel for Leeds social security appeal tribunal since 1979 is as follows:

	Number
1979	5
1980	1
1981	1
1982	2
1983	6
1984	1
1985	1
1986	7
1987	7
1988	2
1989	—
1990	—

The number of members reappointed to the panel for Leeds social security appeal tribunal is available only from 1986:

	Number
1986	8
1987	1
1988	—
1989	2
1990	9

The number of members not reappointed to the panel for Leeds social security appeal tribunal is available only from 1989:

	Number
1989	—
1990	5

During the past five years no complaints from members have been received by the president concerning the conduct of hearings of Leeds social security tribunals.

Sexual Equality

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to ensure that men and women are treated equally in all social security matters.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government are committed to the principle of equal treatment for men and women. Certain social security issues are exempted under European law from the general rule of equal treatment.

Child Support

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the additional cost in 1991-92 of a 10p increase in allowances for dependent children under income support, family credit, housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: It is estimated that the net overall cost of increasing all child premiums by 10p for all four income-related benefits would be about £17 million.

Community Charge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to undertake a fundamental review of the operation of the poll tax rebate scheme in 1991-92.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is conducting a fundamental review of the community charge. Any associated changes in social security arrangements will be considered at the appropriate time.

Earnings

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women earn above the national insurance upper earnings limit, divided into those on basic rate and the top rate of tax in 1991-92.

Mr. Jack: It is estimated that in 1991-92 the numbers of employees with earnings above the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions will be as follows:

	Men million	Women million
Basic rate income tax	1·7	0·3
Higher rate income tax	1·0	0·1
Total	2·7	0·4

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women earn below the national insurance threshold; and how many are between the upper and lower earnings limits in 1991-92.

Mr. Jack: It is estimated that in 1991-92 about 3 million employees, a quarter of whom will be men, will have earnings below the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions. It is also estimated that in that year about 16·5 million employees, split equally between men and women, will have earnings that are between the upper and lower earnings limits.

National Insurance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much revenue would be raised by putting national insurance contributions on savings above (a) £3,000 and (b) £5,000 (i) including pensioners and (ii) excluding pensioners.

Mr. Jack: National insurance contributions are levied only on earned income not on capital.

SCOTLAND

Administrative Costs

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the administrative costs of his Department rose by more or less than the retail prices index in the last financial year.

Mr. Lang: Gross running cost expenditure on Scottish Office administration was 8·3 per cent. higher in 1989-90 than in the previous year. During the same period the retail prices index increased by 7·8 per cent.

Purchasing

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what were his Department's (a) best and (b) worst purchases made in the current month as measured against the Government's supply index;

(2) what were the 10 worst purchases made by his Department in the month of October as measured against the Government's supply index.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office is not a member of the Government supply index.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the purchasing policy of his Department.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office complies with the Government's policy that purchasers should base all procurement of goods and services on value for money, including quality (or fitness for purpose) and delivery against price. In accordance with that policy, goods and services are acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Under EC rules, and the GATT Government procurement agreement (GPA) where appropriate, the Scottish Office is obliged to award relevant contracts in accordance with prescribed procedures aimed at avoiding discrimination on grounds of nationality. To help to ensure effective compliance with these policies, and in line with guidance from HM Treasury's Central Unit on Purchasing, the Scottish Office has established a central purchasing and supply unit.

Woodland Grant Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review the level of grants paid by the Forestry Commission under the woodland grant scheme; and if he will make a statement on the scheme's operation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend expects to make an announcement on this matter shortly.

Nature Conservancy Council (Scotland)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to announce the membership of the council of the Nature Conservancy Council (Scotland).

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend will announce the membership soon.

A1

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the timing of the upgrading of the A1 road from Musselburgh to Dunbar to dual carriageway standard in the light of his recent announcement on his Department's expenditure plans.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There has been no change in our plans to develop and implement a suitable programme of road improvements for the A1 including the dualling of the route first to Haddington and then on to Dunbar. The necessary preparatory work for this upgrading will continue as planned.

Consultation

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his practice to add hon. Members to the list of consultees to whom Scottish Office consultative documents are issued.

Mr. Lang: My Department takes account of the subject matter and purpose of each consultative document in deciding to whom it should be sent. Right hon. and hon. Members are included where they are likely to have an interest. In appropriate circumstances consultative documents are placed in the Library and the attention of the House is drawn to this. Moreover, media publicity is often given to consultative exercises thus enabling anyone with an interest to obtain copies of documents and submit views.

Firearms (Amendment) Act

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to amend section 19 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 to include measures that are partially or wholly funded by private means; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no plans to amend section 19 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988.

Public Sector Tenants (Property Purchases)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) on 22 November, Official Report, column 205, he will name the three authorities which have submitted proposals to operate financial incentive schemes to encourage tenants to buy homes in the private sector and which are currently under consideration.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 December 1990]: Skye and Lochalsh district council, North East Fife district council and Gordon district council have submitted such proposals.

Scottish Refugee Council

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will respond positively to the grant application by the Scottish Refugee Council to the Scottish Office social work services group; and when he expects to respond.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 7 December 1990]: The Scottish Office and the Home Office jointly made available to the Scottish Refugee Council a three-year grant of £25,000 per annum commencing in 1989-90. The council has applied to the Scottish Office for increased grant in 1991-92. This application is currently being considered along with other competing applications, and a decision is expected by early February 1991.

Mr. Brent Hodgson

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement on the progress of the investigation by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland into the case of Mr. Brent Hodgson, a former adult student at the West of Scotland college, Auchincruive, Ayr.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 7 December 1990]: I will write to the hon. Member.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Shellfish

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements are being made or have already been made to protect the environment or the local ecology before the introduction of alien species of shellfish is permitted.

Mr. Curry: It is an offence under section 14 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to release or allow to escape into the wild any animal of a kind which is not ordinarily resident in and is not a regular visitor to Great Britain in a wild state; or which is included in part I of schedule 9 to that Act. Introductions into the wild may be authorised by a licence granted under section 16 and after consultation with the Nature Conservancy Council. These licences may be general or specific and subject to certain conditions. At present general licences permit releases of Pacific oysters (Crassostrea gigas) and Portuguese oysters (Crassostrea angulata). The release of any other species of alien shellfish would require a specific licence. Moreover, all deposits of molluscan shellfish, whether native or non-native, are subject to licensing under the Molluscan Shellfish (Control of Deposit) Order 1974, as varied.

The suitability of alien shellfish for cultivation in our waters is carefully investigated by fisheries department scientists, who take account of the scope for natural recruitment and potential ecological impact. Steps are also taken to ensure that any imported broodstock are free of alien shellfish parasites or diseases. There is no evidence of natural recruitment or ecological harm having arisen from the cultivation of Pacific or Portuguese oysters.

Institute of Food Research

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of the research work carried out at the Institute of Food Research at Norwich which is due to be terminated in 1991.

Mr. Gummer: The following projects, identified as being near-market, are due to terminate in 1991:

Utilisation of proteins as functional ingredients in processed food products.

Optimum conditions for maintaining quality in bulked storage of vegetables.

The Ministry's total expenditure on food R and D is rising from £20·3 million in 1990-91 to £21·4 million in 1991-92.

Farm Employment

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) farmers and (b) farm workers were employed in England on a county-by-county basis in June.

Mr. Gummer: The numbers of farmers and farm workers on main agricultural and horticultural holdings are collected each year under the June agricultural and horticultural census. Results at county level are published from each census in the "Farmers and Workers" section of the "Published Statistical Material" (PSM) statement. The latest statement is for 1989 and a copy is being placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

Information from the 1990 June agricultural and horticultural census is currently being processed and will become available next year.

Surplus Produce

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement explaining the total sum in the 1991 EEC budget which relates to the storage and sale of surplus produce, including the disposal thereof.

Mr. Curry: The total sum in the 1991 draft EC budget relating to the storage, sale and disposal of agricultural produce is 17,900 million ecu (£12,500 million). Of this sum 9,800 million ecu (£6,800 million) relates to export refunds, 4,900 million ecu (£3,400 million) to storage, 600 million ecu (£400 million) to withdrawals and 2,600 million ecu (£1,800 million) to internal disposal subsidies.

Agricultural Products and Wine

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing the special sales of agricultural products and wine agreed by the EEC in the most recent six-month period for which figures are available; and if he will indicate the sale prices of these items in terms of pence per pound.

Mr. Curry: Special sales of agricultural produce and wine that have taken place or been agreed by the EC in the last six months are shown in the table:

Date	Destination	Commodity	Quantity (Tonnes)	Price (pence/lb)
June	Algeria	Wheat	160,800	3·0
June	Morocco	Wheat	122,000	3·0
July	Algeria	Wheat	60,000	3·0
June	Eastern Europe[1]	Rice	500	8·1
July	Eastern Europe[1]	Rice	14,750	7·5
October	Eastern Europe[2]	Rice	3,900	6·1

September	Brazil[3]	Beef-Boneless	30,000	25·3
September	Brazil[3]	Beef-Bone in	50,000	17·5

[1] Includes East Germany.
[2] Excludes East Germany.
[3] Sale agreed by EC but not taken up by Brazil.

Dairy Farms

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many dairy farms there are in England on a county-by-county basis for the latest available date.

Mr. Gummer: The number of holdings with dairy cows in each English county in June 1989 was as follows:

County	Number of holdings
Avon	575
Bedfordshire	59
Berkshire	106
Buckinghamshire	241
Cambridgeshire	62
Cheshire	1,680
Cleveland	84
Cornwall (inc. Isles of Scilly)	1,916
Cumbria	2,430
Derbyshire	1,180
Devon	3,137

Wine

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Southend, East on 20 November, Official Report, column 85, if the rates of export refund for wine fall to be adjusted in respect of the special sales to Poland and other east European nations; and if he will further indicate the prices at which the wine is purchased from EEC sources before the export refund is applied.

Mr. Curry: There are no special arrangements covering the sale of wine, or of EC stocks of wine alcohol, to Poland or other east European nations.

Representative market prices for table wines are published each week in the C series of the Official Journal of the European Communities. The first during the year in question were published in C.113 of 4 May 1989 (P.4); and the last in C.104 of 26 April 1990 (P.7).

I apologise for an error in my earlier answer. Conversion rates to be applied are:

up to 31 August 1989 one ecu/per cent. vol./hectolitre = £0·0675071/litre up to 10 January 1990 one ecu/per cent. vol./hectolitre = £0·0701383/litre

up to 11 January 1990 one ecu/per cent. vol./hectolitre = £0·0704335/litre.

The conversion rates assume table wine at 10 per cent. alcohol by volume.

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people are currently employed in the farm and countryside service of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: On 3 December 1990 there were 1,637 staff employed in the farm and countryside service of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service.

Borrowing

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the total liabilities of United Kingdom agriculture including borrowings by agricultural landlords and farmers, but excluding borrowing for private purposes, for 1989 and 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Information on the total liabilities of United Kingdom agriculture relates to December in each year. No figures are available for 1990. A forecast for 1989 is published in table 3.1 of the 1990 edition of "Farm Income in the United Kingdom" and will be updated in "Agriculture in the United Kingdom", 1990 edition, to be published in January 1991. A forecast for 1990 will be given in "Farm Income in the United Kingdom", 1991 edition, to be published in April 1990. The level in real terms of total liabilities of United Kingdom agriculture has remained broadly stable since 1983.

Research and Development

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amount of money his Ministry gave to fund (a) arable crops research, (b) animal health, (c) animal physiology and genetics, (d) engineering research, (e) food research, (f) grassland and environmental research, (g) horticultural research and (h) plant science research at Agriculture and Food Research Council institutes since 1980; and what are his estimates for 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Gummer: My Department has a significant programme of R and D to provide the necessary scientific base for its policy decisions. In 1990-91 this Department will be spending £121 million on R and D, of which some £45 million (37 per cent.) is at the AFRC institutes.

Information in the detailed format requested is available only from 1987-88 onwards and this is provided in table 1. Comparative data for earlier years can be produced only at disproportionate cost. Tables 2 and 3 give details of that information readily available for the earlier years.

The data exclude central administration and superannuation costs provided by MAFF which are used to support AFRC institutes.

Research Projects

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of research projects which have been identified as near-market for which his Ministry will withdraw funding; how many of these projects have since found funding from industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: As I have stated on a previous occasion, a comprehensive list is not available and can be produced only at disproportionate cost. The two lists provide details of projects in the fisheries and food sectors which have been identified as near-market research for which funding by my Department has been, or is being, phased out in line with Government policy. Information is not available on how many of these projects have attracted funding from industry.

List 1

Projects for Termination in 1990

1. Effects of Frozen Storage on quality and processing meat.
2. Carcase characteristics that determine value.
3. Effects of poultry breeding, husbandry, handling and processing on carcase composition and quality.
4. Flavour of cheese, fats, oils and confectionery.
5. Identify off flavours and taints resulting from processing, packaging and storage of cheese, fats, oils, confectionery and beverages.
6. Factors controlling meat restructuring processes.
7. Protein solubilisation and adhesion in reformed meats.
8. Adhesions and cohesion in meat products.
9. Effects of breeding, husbandry and poultry plant operations on the further processing quality of turkey meat.
10. Crystallisation behaviour of triglyceride mixtures in bulk phase and emulsion systems.
11. Temperature and mass change in meat cooking.
12. Electrical stimulation, hot boning and accelerated ageing.
13. Electrical stimulation, hot boning and processing properties of beef, pork and poultry.
14. Industrial development and technology transfer.
15. Optimum conditions for maintaining quality in packaged fruit and vegetables.
16. Use of microbial enzymes for the upgrading of sugar beet.
17. Carcase composition and meat quality in cattle.
18. Carcase composition and meat quality in sheep.
19. Techniques for assessment of carcase composition.
20. Effects of pre-slaughter handling practices on value of carcase and fresh meat.
21. Microbial spoilage of packaged fish and shellfish.
22. Innovation of fish and shellfish products and relevant process technology.
23. Shellfish processing.
24. Textural modification of recovered flesh.
25. Improved chilling and handling of sea fish and farmed fish.
26. Innovation and characterisation of added value products from industrial and waste fish resources and development of relevant new pilot plant processes or existing processes.
27. Improvements in the efficiency of processing fish—smoking.
28. Investigation of chemical/physical methods of reducing the rate of deterioration of bulk stored fish at sea.
29. Assessment of the requirements for the introduction of freezing-at-sea on small fishing vessels.
30. Study of cultured fish in relation to general quality aspects and to their suitability for processing.
31. The efficient use of recovered fish flesh for human consumption.
32. Applications of electronics and physical sensors in fish processing.
33. Plant design—Development of monitoring and control systems.
34. Refrigeration—the design and development of a multipass freezer.
35. Plant design—Energy utilisation in fish processing.
36. Plant design—A study of fundamental principles in the design and development of new smoking processes.
37. Processing machinery—Development of a machine to produce uncoated formed fillets.
38. Processing machinery—Separation of meat from shellfish.

List 2

Projects for termination in 1991

1. Utilisation of proteins as functional ingredients in processed food products.
2. Chemical composition and processing conditions on functional properties of food emulsions.
3. Composition factors and processing conditions of fat in food emulsions.
4. Heat and mass transfer in meat refrigeration.
5. Robotics in meat handling and processing.
6. Meat process engineering.
7. Quality control robotic vision and meat grading by video image analysis and fibre.
8. Production of savoury flavour-enhancing peptides by enzymes.
9. Improve yield and quality of cheese and other fermented dairy products using cultures and enzymes derived from biotechnology programmes at IFR.
10. Packaging techniques for improved storage and display.
11. Optimum conditions for maintaining quality in bulked storage of vegetables.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what he is charging Dr. Harash Narang of the public health laboratory for the supply of cattle heads for BSE testing; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many cattle brains he is supplying to Dr. Harash Narang at the public health laboratory in Newcastle for BSE tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: We are supplying Dr. Harash Narang with 10 cattle brains at £50 each. This cost reflects the expenditure incurred by my Department in ensuring the supply of both positive and negative BSE material.

Bankruptcies

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has for the number of bankruptcies in the agricultural sector in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Figures for bankruptcies in England and Wales for the agricultural and horticultural sectors over the last five years are as follows:

	Number of bankruptcies	Percentage of total bankruptcies
1985	136	2·1
1986	130	1·9
1987	172	2·4
1988	162	2·1
1989	142	1·7

Note: These and related figures were set out in the 9 November issue of "Business Briefing" published by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce. The balance sheet for British agriculture remains strong with the value of assets being six times liabilities.

ENERGY

V7 Light Bulbs

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the V7 light bulb; whether Her Majesty's Government will be taking any steps to promote its use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The V7 light bulb is an energy-efficient compact fluorescent lamp available in the United States and manufactured to operate at United States voltage levels. My Energy Efficiency Office has examined a range of similar commercially available lamps in the United Kingdom. Compact fluorescent lamps are now becoming generally available in high street shops and supermarkets. They use 75 to 80 per cent. less electricity and last eight times as long as normal light bulbs for which they are suitable as direct replacements. The electricity they save will more than cover their extra initial cost.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many separate individual applicants have applied for shares in the regional electricity companies of England and Wales.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many individuals have made applications for shares in one or more regional electricity company.

Mr. Wakeham: A total of 12·75 million applications have been made for shares in the 12 regional companies share offers. Precise figures are not available at this stage, but the number of application forms is estimated at over 5 million. This is the highest number for any privatisation.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate for each regional electricity company floated, what the breakdown is of (a) within franchise area individual shareholders, (b) outside franchise area individual shareholders and (c) institutional shareholders.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 10 December 1990, at column 300.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he is yet in a position to state how many applications for shares in one or more regional electricity companies have been received from households involving more than one applicant.

Mr. Wakeham: No.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated cost allocated for the use of the TRAP computer programme for the detection of illegal multiple share applications for shares in the electricity flotation.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The electricity fraud auditors have set up a number of sophisticated systems for the detection of multiple share applications. The costs will depend on the scale of the work required.

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department's purchasing information system does not differentiate between acquiring and commissioning goods and services. However, information on the Department's purchasing expenditure from 1986-87 is set out in the annual reports of the Central Unit on Purchasing, copies of which are available in the Library.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested is as follows:

	Press advertising	Television and radio advertising	Other advertising and promotion	Videos and sound cassettes[2]
1989-90	892	0	1,000	120
1988-89	2,378	4	1,313	184
1987-88	1,513	0	959	44
1986-87	11,830	17,519	4,501	62
1985-86	1,589	2,212	[1]	49

[1] Expenditure on other advertising and promotion is not available for 1985-86 on a comparable basis.
[2] Includes expenditure on films as well as videos.

THE ARTS

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Renton: My Department's accounting information system does not differentiate between the acquisition and commissioning of goods and services. The Office of Arts and Libraries administration vote totals £1,802,000 in 1990-91, of which about £150,000 will be spent on goods and services.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Mr. Renton: There has been expenditure by my Department only on the category "other advertising and promotion". The details for the last five years are as follows:

Year	£
1986-87	Nil
1987-88	13,225
1988-89	6,785
1989-90	1,564
1990-91	658

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

University Staff

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement pursuant to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's letter, reference TEAH/614/1016 of 5 November to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, on his study of the report commissioned by the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and AUT on recruitment and retention of university, academic and academic-related staff.

Mr. Alan Howarth: In agreeing appropriate pay levels for university academic and academic-related staff, the Government regard recruitment and retention as most important factors for consideration. The report referred to by the hon. Member will be taken into account in the context of the 1991 pay settlement. Our examination of the report has concluded that it does not appear to shed any significant new light on the question of staff outflows overseas.

Educational Psychologists

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the numbers of educational psychologists placed in schools with substantial ethnic minority populations who are able to speak the language of that minority for 1985 to 1990.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information requested is not collected centrally. The employment and deployment of educational psychologists is the responsibility of the individual local education authority.

Ethnic Minority Pupils

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has, for the last five years, on the number of ethnic minority pupils who have stayed on in school after the age of 16 years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information requested is not available centrally.

Multi-faith Education

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will outline the ways in which multi-faith education is currently being promoted.

Mr. Eggar: Within the framework of the Education Reform Act, the precise content of religious education is a matter for local determination. The changes introduced by the ERA secure the place of Christianity within RE in schools, while taking account of the needs and aspirations of the many people who hold different beliefs. In county schools, RE must be provided in accordance with a locally agreed syllabus drawn up by a conference, convened for that purpose by the LEA and reflecting the principal religious traditions of the area. The ERA requires all new syllabuses to "reflect the fact that the religious traditions in Great Britain are in the main Christian whilst taking account of the teaching and practices of the other principal religions represented in Great Britain".

Teachers (Language Training)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money has been spent in the past five years on the training of teachers in other languages; and if he will give the languages currently being studied by those teachers.

Mr. Fallon: Training costs for individual courses vary between institutions and details are not held centrally. The principal languages other than English being studied include French, German, Spanish, Italian, Welsh, Latin and Greek.

Schools (Annual Grants)

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what, for each authority in which there is a grant-maintained school, is the average sum per pupil, in the primary or secondary phases, as appropriate, attributed in the calculations of annual maintenance grants to central services (a) for 1989-90 and (b) for 1990-91.

Mr. Eggar: This information is given in the table:

Central costs component of annual maintenance grant for grant maintained schools

Local education authority	Per pupil amount (£) 1989-90	Per pupil amount (£) 1990-91
Barnet	186	251

Notes:

1. Figures are full-year equivalent for secondary schools. There are currently no grant-maintained primary schools in operation.

2. Apportionment of costs between school and local education authority level will have changed in some local education authorities between 1989-90 and 1990-91 as a result of the introduction on 1 April 1990 of financial delegation schemes for local management of schools.
3. Figures for Avon, Brent and Hammersmith have yet to be finalised.

Schools (Suspensions)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has, for the last 12 months, on the number of pupils expelled or suspended from primary and secondary schools, by ethnic origin.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested is not available centrally.

Bilingual Teachers

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the number of bilingual teachers appointed since 1985 by primary and secondary schools to bridge the language gap between teachers and students or parents.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested in not available centrally.

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service for employees within his Department, stating (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mr. Eggar: All civil service departments and agencies have access to the services of the civil service occupational health service which employs some 100 fully qualified occupational health professionals—doctors, nurses and hygiene and safety advisers. It operates via a network of regional offices throughout the United Kingdom. DES does not itself provide occupational health services. The Department currently employs some 2,600 staff.

Food Research

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of the staff losses expected at the Institute of Food Research attributable to the withdrawal of Government funding from those projects designated as near market.

Mr. Alan Howarth: A total of 19 posts will be lost by the end of the financial year 1990-91, as a result of the withdrawal of Government funding for "near market" research in 1991-92.

In addition, a further 24 posts will be lost during the same period, because of the realignment of existing Government commissions.

Science and Engineering Research Council

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the amount of the special bonus paid by the Science and Engineering Research Council to its establishment officer in 1989.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Under a scheme for Science and Engineering Research Council employees operative at the time, merit awards were made in February 1990 to the council's establishment officer and to a number of other staff. It is not normal practice to make public the value of payments to individual members of the Science and Engineering Research Council staff.

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: Departmental purchasing information systems do not differentiate between acquiring and commissioning goods and services. However, information on departmental purchasing expenditure from 1986-87 is set out in the annual reports of the Central Unit on Purchasing, copies of which are available in the Library.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Mr. Eggar: The expenditure figures for advertising and other promotional materials by this Department for the financial years 1986-87 to 1989-90 are provided in the table. Video and cassette costs cannot readily be disaggregated from other advertising and promotion costs. The 1990-91 figure is provisional.

Education Resources

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures he is taking to ensure that more resources are delegated to schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend is publishing today two draft circulars which will take forward our policies on local management of schools and on more open enrolment. My right hon. and learned Friend is determined to ensure that as much money as is reasonably possible is delegated to schools to manage themselves, and that parents are given the widest possible choice of school at primary as well as at secondary level. Copies of the two circulars are today being placed in the Library of the House.

The draft circular on local management of schools will require LEAs, before 1 April 1993, to hand over to schools at least 85 per cent. of the potential schools budget, and to determine 80 per cent. of school budgets on the basis of pupil numbers. The draft circular will also require, by 1 April 1994, the extension of delegated management to all small schools and to those special schools that are able and want to manage their own budgets.

The two tables show, where the information has been provided, how each LEA currently performs against these criteria.

The draft circular on more open enrolment sets out our plans to extend that policy to all primary schools for intakes from autumn 1992. This will ensure that schools may not turn away any pupils while they have the space to take them, and so remove artificial limits on parental choice.

EC Education Ministers

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the outcome of the meeting of European Community Education Ministers on Thursday 6 December.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I represented the United Kingdom at a meeting of the Education Council and of the EC Education Ministers meeting within the Council on 6 December. The Council and the Ministers meeting within the Council:

— agreed a resolution inviting the Commission to report on the development of the EURYDICE information network,
— invited the Commission to conduct a survey on current and planned school activities in the field of education against drug abuse and to report in the context of its report on the implementation of the resolution of 1988 on health education,
— agreed a range of activities to promote co-operation between member states in the development of assessment systems in education,
— discussed aspects of the development of professional and vocational higher education.

The meeting was preceded by an informal discussion with the Polish and Hungarian Ministers of Education and the Czechoslovakian Vice-Minister for Education.

PRIME MINISTER

Gulf Crisis

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister whether any disciplinary action is proposed against Brigadier Patrick Cordingley in respect of public statements about potential casualties in the event of resort to a military option in the Gulf.

The Prime Minister: No.

Iraq (Supergun)

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Prime Minister which Government Departments were consulted about the orders for Iraq placed in 1988 by Walter Somers and Forgemasters.

The Prime Minister: In the case of Walter Somers, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Ministry of Defence were involved. For the licence application made by Sheffield Forgemasters only DTI was involved.

Nature Conservation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the representations he has had from staff of the Nature Conservancy Council in Peterborough and Huntingdon about the break-up of the Nature Conservancy Council.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 December 1990]: In my capacity as the Member for Huntingdon, I received several letters and other representations from constituents employed by the Nature Conservancy Council about the planned reorganisation of the council. I have responded to those representations.

Science Policy

Dr. Bray: To ask the Prime Minister if he intends to take the overall responsibility for science policy; if he proposes to chair the Advisory Council on Science and Technology and the Cabinet Committee on Science and Technology; and what arrangements he proposes to make for overall ministerial responsibility for science policy.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 December 1990]: My intention is to continue the arrangements set out in the White Paper, "Civil Research and Development" (CM 185) of July 1987. In particular there will be collective ministerial consideration, under my chairmanship, of science and technology policy and priorities and the provision of independent advice from the Advisory Council on Science and Technology (ACOST), chaired by Sir Robin Nicholson FRS.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will seek to arrange for the Order Paper to list the total number of questions entered in the ballot for each oral Question Time.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King), at column 296.

WALES

Hospital Closures

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the date for a decision on the hospital closures proposed by South Glamorgan health authority.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: With the exception of the William Nicholls home, for which further consultation does not end until 31 December, it is hoped that decisions will be issued shortly.

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service for employees within his Department, stating (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Office employs the Civil Service Occupational Health Service to provide this service for its 2,352 employees. It does not employ staff directly for this purpose.

Agricultural Co-operatives

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial support will be given to the organisation for the promotion of agricultural co-operatives in Wales in 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Agricultural Organisation Society does not receive any direct Government funds. One of the changes arising from the restructuring of Food From Britain's finances in 1988 was that the Welsh Agricultural Organisation Society would not, after March 1990, receive the annual subvention it had previously enjoyed. Food From Britain's new business plan emphasised project-based funding targeted at specific objectives. Consequently, Food From Britain will still consider funding the Welsh Agriculture Organisation Society, but only on a specific project basis.

Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to ensure quality control and effective monitoring of the services provided as a result of the £150,000 funding for work on alcohol abuse announced by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary at his Department on Drinkwise Day in June.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Arrangements for monitoring and evaluation of services are outlined in the guidance contained in WHC90(78) and WHC90(79) which were issued on 5 December 1990. Copies of both these circulars are in the Library of the House.

Homelessness

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons are classed as homeless in (a) Ceredigion and (b) Dyfed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Ninety-four persons in Ceredigion and 353 in Dyfed were accepted as homeless during the third quarter of 1990.

Young Offenders

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the provision of secure accommodation for 15 and 16-year-olds.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Our officials are currently conducting a review of secure child care, including secure accommodation, in Wales. They have sought and received views on the provision of secure accommodation for young people from the chief executives of the county councils in Wales; from the chief constables, chief probation officers, chief Crown prosecutors and clerks to the magistrates in the Principality; and from select voluntary organisations. In addition we have received a small number of letters from other interested parties, from members of the public and from right hon. and hon. Members. All representations received are being taken fully into account in the review.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he intends to announce to increase the amount of secure accommodation in Wales for youngsters of 15 and 16 years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my earlier reply of today. All options for improvement in secure child care practice in Wales are being considered in the Department's review of this area. In particular, the review will assess need for secure accommodation and will consider how that need might be met in the future. We have asked for the review to be completed early in the new year.

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: Departmental information systems do not differentiate between acquiring and commissioning goods and services. Information on departmental purchasing expenditure from 1986-87, however, is set out in the annual report of the central unit on purchasing, copies of which are available from the Library of the House.

Health and Social Services Research

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) in cash terms and (b) deflated according to an appropriate index of higher education pay and prices the spending on health and personal social services research in each year from 1979 to the most recent year which his Department has funded in universities, polytechnics and other related institutions.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Funding for health and personal social services research is largely provided under the joint England and Wales health and personal social services research programme. Spending on this programme in 1989-90, the latest year for which outturn figures are available, was £15·4 million.

Information for earlier years is available in the Cabinet Office annual review of Government-funded research and development.

Some additional funding for health research in Wales is provided directly by the Welsh Office. Spending in 1989-90, the latest year for which outturn figures are available, amounted to £518,000. Information for earlier years is available in the appropriation accounts.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Mr. David Hunt: Welsh Office expenditure on advertising and other promotional activity for the past five financial years is shown in the following table:

Year	Press advertising	Television advertising	Other advertising and promotion
1985-86	31,000	Nil	92,000
1986-87	49,000	27,000	331,000
1987-88	191,000	39,000	615,000
1988-89	112,000	64,000	1,105,000
1989-90	354,000	57,000	1,758,000

Expenditure for promotion videos and sound cassettes is contained within the amounts given for other advertising and promotion as records do not allow these elements to be quantified separately.

Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of resources will be provided for the Countryside Council for Wales in the 1991-92 financial year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The proposed provision for the Countryside Council for Wales in 1991-92 is £14,554,000. This will enable the new body to undertake a comprehensive and balanced programme of work in discharge of all its functions. It fully meets the assurances I have previously given that the council will be adequately resourced.

Soviet Union (Food Aid)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to launch a food aid package on behalf of the people of Wales to the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer Monday 10 December]: This is a matter which my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food would consider sympathetically if any such request for assistance were received from the Soviet Union.

Transport

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase transport expenditure in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on planned expenditure for 1991-92 will be set out in the Welsh Office departmental report 1991 to be published early in the new year.

Epileptics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the work with epileptics and their families in parts of north Wales, undertaken with support from the Mersey Region Epilepsy Association.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend and I are aware that a number of voluntary bodies, including the Mersey Region Epilepsy Association, make a valued contribution to the development and provision of services.

Health and Personal Social Services

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has reached a decision about the allocation of resources for health and personal social services in Wales in 1991-92.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval, I have decided on the allocation. I shall place a summary of my proposals in the Library of the House.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Incomes

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the average post-tax income of the bottom 2 per cent. of income tax payers in each financial year since 1979-80;

(2) what was the average post-tax income of the top 2 per cent. of income tax payers in each financial year since 1979-80.

Mr. Maude: Estimates are given in the table for 1979-80, and 1990-91. Information for other years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. All estimates of income are based on information reported to tax offices and collected through the annual surveys of personal incomes. For 1979-80 the figure excludes employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes and some investment income on which tax is deducted at source. The figures for 1979-80 represent the average income of single people or married couples; for 1990-91 the figure relates to individuals following the change to independent taxation. The figures for 1990-91 are based on projections of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes and are therefore provisional.

I regret that reliable estimates for the bottom 2 per cent. of taxpayers are not available. The table therefore shows figures for the bottom 5 per cent.

Average post-tax income (£)

	1979-80[1]	1990-91[2]
Bottom 5 per cent.	1,800	4,300
Top 2 per cent.	15,100	51,800

Average tax paid (£)

	1979-80[1]	1990-91[2]
Bottom 5 per cent.	40	60
Top 2 per cent.	8,200	23,500

[1] For single people and married couples.
[2] For individuals.

European Monetary System

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment has been made of the experience of France and Italy in the European monetary system since 1979 so far as employment in manufacturing is concerned; and if he will publish a table showing the numbers employed in manufacturing in Germany, France and Italy each year since 1979 and at the latest available date together with the percentage increase since 1979 and 1985, respectively.

Mr. Maples: Data for manufacturing employment in France, Germany and Italy are published by the OECD in "Labour Force Statistics 1968-88".

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment has been made of the experience of the original EC Six in the European monetary system since 1979 so far as the rate of economic growth is concerned; and if he will publish a table showing for each of the six the average rate of growth since 1979 as a percentage of the rate of growth in (i) the decade ending in 1973 and (ii) in the period in which the currency snake was in operation.

Mr. Maples: Data for GDP of the original members of the European Community are published by the OECD in "National Accounts 1960-88" and in "Main Economic Indicators".

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service for employees within his Department, stating (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: All civil service departments and agencies have access to the services of the civil service occupational health service which employs some 100 fully qualified occupational health professionals—doctors, nurses and hygiene and safety advisers. It operates via a network of regional offices throughout the United Kingdom. The Treasury employs about 3,150 staff who have access to three welfare staff and 32 first-aiders in additional to CSOHS services.

Income Tax

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the change in Treasury income during the financial year 1991-92 resulting from (a) increasing all personal allowances in line with the rise in average earnings and (b) increasing the threshold for the higher rate of income tax in line with earnings rather than prices.

Mr. Maude: At 1991-92 levels of income the estimated tax yield resulting from indexation in line with earnings compared with price indexation are as shown in the table. The estimates are based on the illustrative rate of price indexation of 10·25 per cent. and the working assumption of an 8·5 per cent. increase in average earnings between 1990-91 and 1991-92 used in the autumn statement 1990.

£ million

	Yield in a full year	Yield in 1991-92
Personal allowances	450	340
Threshold for higher rate	120	70

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Departmental purchasing information systems do not differentiate between acquiring and commissioning goods and services. However, information on departmental purchasing expenditure from 1986-87 is set out in the annual reports of the Central Unit on Purchasing, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Benefits in Kind

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers get benefits in kind; and what is their average income.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 10 December 1990]: It is estimated that in 1990-91 2·77 million taxpayers receive taxable benefits in kind and that their average earnings, including the taxable value of the benefits, are £23,000. These estimates are based on projections from data relating to 1987-88 and are provisional.

Upper Earnings Limit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people who pay tax are below the upper earnings limit for 1991-92.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 10 December 1990]: It is estimated that in 1991-92 there will be about 19·5 million taxpayers in employment and self-employment aged under 65 with earned income below £20,280, the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions purposes.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Syria

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Syrian Government concerning human rights in that country.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 4 December 1990.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the complete removal of land-based short-range nuclear weapons in Europe through future negotiations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The objectives of negotiations on short-range nuclear forces in Europe remain subject to discussion within the NATO alliance.

Missile Technology Control

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the transfer of items from category I to category II of the missile technology control regime, and on the application of more stringent inspection rights to ensure end-use compliance under the terms of the regime.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In collaboration with our partners we keep the missile technology and control regime equipment and technology annex under constant review. Ensuring end-use compliance is the responsibility of individual supplying Governments in co-operation with the receiving Government. The United Kingdom is prepared to consider on-site inspection where appropriate.

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service, for employees within his Department, stating (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All civil service departments and agencies have access to the services of the civil service occupational health service, which employs some 100 fully qualified occupational health professionals—doctors, nurses and hygiene and safety advisers. It operates via a network of regional offices throughout the United Kingdom.

In addition, employees of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Overseas Development Administration (and some British Council employees overseas) benefit from a contractual arrangement with St. Thomas's hospital, which provides advice on occupational health matters as well as a wider health care service.

The St. Thomas's implant in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office consists of three full-time medical advisers, two part-time medical advisers, three full-time occupational nursing sisters, two part-time occupational nursing sisters and one health promotion adviser. In addition, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office employs a full-time staff counsellor.

The total number of staff in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office including the Overseas Development Administration at the beginning of November 1990 was 8,044.

Western Sahara

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what military, financial and logistical assistance Her Majesty's Government are planning to make available for the United Nations plan for the western Sahara recently put before the United Nations Security Council by the Secretary-General.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations Secretary-General has not yet formally submitted to the Security Council his definitive report on United Nations involvement in the western Sahara. Until he does, we will not be in a position to take any decision on precisely what support we will be able to offer although as a permanent member we shall, of course, be closely involved.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the right of signatories to the chemical weapons convention to retain a percentage of their stockpile of chemical weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 15 January 1990.

Gibraltar

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which European Community programmes and legislation apply to Gibraltar.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The provisions of the EC treaties apply to Gibraltar. However, under the arrangements agreed on the United Kingdom's accession to the Community, the common agricultural policy and Community rules on VAT do not apply to Gibraltar. Gibraltar is outside the Community's customs territory and the rules on free movement of goods do not apply.

Antarctic Treaty (Chile Meeting)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals for environmental protection have been tabled at the meeting of Antarctic treaty parties in Chile; and which of these proposals provides the basis on which the meeting is proceeding.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The following draft proposals were tabled at the meeting of Antarctic treaty parties, which ended in Chile on 6 December:

(i) United Kingdom environment protocol
(ii) New Zealand environmental protocol
(iii) Australian/French conservation convention
(iv) United States of America environmental protocol

All these proposals contributed to the draft protocol which was accepted at the end of the meeting as a basis for further discussion.

The Gulf (Hostages)

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice is being given by his Department to relatives of hostages in Iraq and Kuwait in relation to their visiting their hostage relatives.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Saddam Hussein announced on 6 December that all foreign nationals were allowed to leave Iraq. We are arranging for the vast majority to do so. There is therefore no need for families to visit Baghdad.

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in arranging for parcels to be sent to hostages in Iraq and Kuwait.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The British Red Cross is already packing parcels. They will be dispatched on 19 December if there is still a need for them.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) written and (b) oral questions he has answered (1) last Session and (2) to date in the current Session on (i) the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, (ii) nuclear weapons testing and a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty and (iii) nuclear export controls.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of questions answered is as follows:

Session	Written	Oral
1989-90
(i)	164	3
(ii)	18	—
(iii)	5	—
1990-91

Session	Written	Oral
(i)	7	—
(ii)	4	—

Iraqi Nuclear Facilities

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek a report from the United Kingdom permanent representative to the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna on the reliability of the report of the recently conducted IAEA safeguards inspection of Iraqi nuclear facilities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No; we have confidence in the IAEA's safeguards inspection procedures.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what payments have been made direct to political parties or organisations from know-how funds or otherwise in the countries of eastern Europe, including the Soviet Union and the area formerly known as the German Democratic Republic; what was the size of each such payment and the organisation benefiting; and what was the education and training purpose of the grants.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There have been no direct payments to political parties or organisations in east and central Europe or the Soviet Union from the know-how funds or other Foreign and Commonwealth Office sources.

China

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of the People's Republic of China regarding human rights in China, with particular reference to religious activities.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My noble Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office raised the subject of human rights with the visiting Chinese Vice Foreign Minister on 21 November, as did my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in his meeting with the Chinese Foreign Minister in New York on 28 September. My hon. Friend the then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office specifically mentioned religious activities when expressing our concern on this issue to the Chinese authorities during his visit to China in July.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Expenditure by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on advertising and other promotional material for the years 1985-86 to 1989-90 is as follows:

	FCO Diplomatic Wing £	FCO ODA Wing £
1985-86	161,000	271,000
1986-87	336,000	228,000
1987-88	195,000	351,000
1988-89	289,000	330,000
1989-90	329,000	530,000

A disaggregation of these figures to identify the medium used is not available.

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Departmental purchasing information systems do not differentiate between acquiring and commissioning goods and services. However, information on departmental purchasing expenditure from 1986-87 is set out in the annual reports of the Central Unit on Purchasing, copies of which are available in the Library.

Malawi

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to monitor the observance of human rights in Malawi.

Mrs. Chalker: We regularly raise reports of human rights violations with the Malawian authorities and monitor subsequent progress.

Africa

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from Africa Watch about linking future economic assistance to African countries with steps by them to end abuses of human rights.

Mrs. Chalker: We received representations from Africa Watch on Kenya in this context, to which my right hon. Friend the then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office replied. The Secretary of State has today received a further representation from Africa Watch, to which we will reply as soon as possible.

TRANSPORT

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service for employees within his Department; and (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department of Transport, in common with all civil service departments, has access to the services of the civil service occupational health service (CSOHS), which employs some 100 fully qualified occupational health professionals—doctors, nurses and hygiene and safety advisers. The CSOHS operates via a network of regional offices throughout the United Kingdom and also provides on-site medical advice to departments.

The Department of Transport employs 16,700 staff.

Defective Eyesight

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many candidates over the last five years failed the Department of Transport driving test due to defective eyesight; and if he will express the figures as a percentage of all failures and as a percentage of all candidates.

Mr. Chope: I am asking the chief executive of the Driving Standards Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to review the method of conducting the eyesight check during the Department of Transport driving test; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have no plans to do so. The present number plate test is a simple, cheap and effective test which can also be carried out by drivers themselves and by the police at the roadside. The College of Ophthalmologists and the Medical Commission on Accident Prevention at the Royal College of Surgeons fully endorse the test.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans his Department has to introduce regular eyesight checks for drivers after they have passed the Department of Transport driving test.

Mr. Chope: None. It is the responsibility of all drivers to ensure that they continue to meet the eyesight standard for driving and to notify DVLA of any deterioration in their eyesight which might affect their ability to drive safely.

Heathrow-US Air Route

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the names of airlines which fly from Heathrow airport to the United States of America.

Mr. McLoughlin: Under the terms of the United Kingdom—United States air services agreement British Airways, Pan American World Airways and Trans World Airlines are permitted to operate scheduled passenger services between London Heathrow and the United States.

In addition, the following airlines have been granted permission by both the United States Government and the Government of the United Kingdom to operate scheduled passenger services from their country of origin via London (including Heathrow) to the United States:

Air India
El Al Israel Airlines
Kuwait Airways Corporation

Other airlines may be able to fly from Heathrow to the United States as part of an international route, but without traffic rights on the London—United States sector.

Channel Tunnel (Rail Services)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he expects orders to be placed for rolling stock for day and night services from the channel tunnel to destinations on electrified lines north of London; (2) how soon after the channel tunnel opens he expects direct services to operate from it to destinations north of London on electrified lines; and whether he expects such services to operate via the West London, Olympia—Willesden-West Hampstead lines.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) on 5 December at column 121. British Rail plans to route the direct north of London services via Olympia using the west London and north London lines in the early years of tunnel operation.

MV Derbyshire

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make available in the Library the draft report of the inquiry into the shipwreck of MV Derbyshire.

Mr. McLoughlin: A draft report summarising the results of the Department of Transport's investigation into the tragic loss of MV Derbyshire was circulated in July 1985 to representatives of interested parties for comment. A copy of the final report was placed in the Library on 21 March 1986, and it would be inappropriate now to release copies of the earlier draft report. Since that final report was issued, an independent public inquiry into the loss of the Derbyshire has been held.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Mr. McLoughlin: The spending by my Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion, and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes in each of the five most recent years is as follows:

£ thousands

	Press	Television and radio	Other advertising	Video and sound cassettes
1985-86	834	928	3,990	36
1986-87	738	592	4,440	49
1987-88	140	2,360	2,967	43
1988-89	365	1,977	3,275	92
1989-90	982	2,163	3,112	177

The expenditure by my Department is recorded in financial years, not calendar years.

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Departmental purchasing information systems do not differentiate between acquiring and commissioning goods and services. However, information on departmental purchasing expenditure from 1986-87 is set out in the annual reports of the Central Unit on Purchasing, copies of which are available in the Library.

Concessionary Fares

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will amend section 93(7)(a) of the Transport Act 1985 to enable transport authorities to grant fare concessions to men aged 60 to 64 years.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to change the present arrangements which link eligibility for travel concessions for elderly people to state pensionable age.

Midland Metro

Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest position with regard to the appraisal of line 1 of the Midland Metro scheme proposed by the West Midlands passenger transport executive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Considerable work has been done on the appraisal, which is further advanced than that for any other light rail scheme outside London currently being considered by the Department. The formal appraisal procedure is not yet complete. If it proves favourable, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will be ready to consider paying development grant in 1991-92 under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968 towards the cost of preparing the scheme in greater detail so that the scheme itself may be considered for being funded in 1992-93.

Woolwich Ferry

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the latest estimates of the number of vehicles using the Woolwich free ferry; and what were the comparable figures at a similar point in each of the preceding five years.

Mr. Chope: The average number of vehicles carried per day was as follows:

	Number
November 1990	2,480
November 1989	2,515
November 1988	1,956
November 1987	441
November 1986	1,816
November 1985	2,945

Road Accidents

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of fatalities in accidents involving heavy duty goods vehicles over the past five years, together with the number of fatalities over the same period not involving heavy duty goods vehicles.

Mr. Chope: Following is the information:

Fatal casualties in accidents, 1985-89

Year	HGV involved	HGV not involved	Total
1985	811	4,354	5,165
1986	908	4,474	5,382
1987	910	4,215	5,125
1988	900	4,152	5,052
1989	989	4,384	5,373

This table shows that there was a 22 per cent. increase in fatal casualties in accidents in which at least one HGV was involved between 1985 and 1989.

Over the same period, HGV traffic, when measured in vehicle kilometres, rose by an estimated 30 per cent.

Illegal Parking

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the response to his Department's discussion document issued to local authorities on solving the problems created by parking on pavements.

Mr. Chope: Over 450 responses were received, expressing a wide range of views. We have concluded that new statutory powers are needed to allow authorities to target problem areas effectively. We are now discussing with the local authorities advice on available engineering measures to deter parking on footways and verges.

Car Phones

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to meet the Association of Chief Police Officers, or any other relevant organisation, to discuss the safety implications of the use of hand-held car telephones in moving vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I shall take the opportunity of a meeting I shall be having with ACPO on 17 December to raise this issue.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has issued any guidance to the police authorities concerning the safety implications of using hand-held car telephones in moving vehicles.

Mr. Chope: No.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information directed to the public his Department has published on the safety implications of the use of hand-held car telephones in moving vehicles.

Mr. Chope: Advice to drivers not to use a hand-held microphone or telephone while the vehicle is moving is given in the Highway Code and several other publications.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received expressing concern at the use of hand-held car telephones in moving vehicles.

Mr. Chope: I have received several letters on this subject in recent months.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to require suppliers of hand-held car telephones to issue safety warnings at the time of purchase concerning their use in moving vehicles.

Mr. Chope: No. British Telecom already issues advice to purchasers which is consistent with the Highway Code. Officials have written to Oftel about continued publicity.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce legislation restricting the use of hand-held car telephones in moving vehicles.

Mr. Chope: No specific legislation is necessary. Drivers are already required to maintain full control over their vehicles.

Defective Eyesight

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total number of motor traffic accidents in the last five years where defective eyesight was found to be a contributory factor; if he will express the figures as a percentage of all moving traffic accidents for each of the years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Statistics recording accidents are derived from a factual record made by the police at the scene of the accident. They do not include an assessment of the cause and it is not therefore possible to provide information about the number of accidents attributable to a particular factor.

Manchester Relief Road (Consultation)

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make it his policy to ensure that the proposed public consultation on the route of the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road will be carried out at venues and times convenient to residents of the Bury South and Bury North parliamentary constituencies.

Mr. Chope: Yes.

DEFENCE

Sri Lanka

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any British service personnel have been made available to the Government of Sri Lanka for any purposes during the last four years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not held centrally. I will write to the hon. Member.

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Alan Clark: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost and effort.

Radar Masts, Sennybridge

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals exist for the construction of radar masts or any communications system at Mynydd Eppynt near Sennybridge, Dyfed.

Mr. Alan Clark: A requirement for new defence communication facilities is under consideration, but no decisions on location have yet been taken.

Iraq (Supergun)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the involvement of the Advanced Technology Institute in the Iraqi gun order.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Advanced Technology Institute was established as a company in 1987. Since earlier this year, when we became aware of its possible association with the Iraqi gun project, we have maintained a close watch on it. The hon. Member will appreciate I cannot comment further.

Space Research Corporation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what information has been received by his Department on the Space Research Corporation's contract, Babylon, with British companies;

(2) what information his Department received on the order placed by the Space Research Corporation for project 839 with British companies.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Space Research Corporation placed no contracts with British companies in this context.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Records

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the charge made at each Companies House satellite office from an inquirer who (a) will collect the microfiche records of the company from the satellite office or (b) gets the microfiche records of the company posted to his or her office or home; and how the charges are arrived at.

Mr. Redwood: Those customers who collect their microfiche records from the satellite offices are charged the £2·75 statutory fee per company record. Searches ordered from satellite offices are normally returned to the satellite office the next morning for the standard search fee of £2·75. Should however a customer require his search to be forwarded by post to an address of his choice, this is not carried out from the satellite office.

Lloyd's

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, if he will review the workings of the self-regulatory status granted to Lloyd's under the Financial Services Act 1986 in the light of the actions of and the internal inquiries into the syndicates managed by Outhwaite, Oakley Vaughan, Warnlow and Feltrim.

Mr. Redwood: The committee of inquiry into regulatory arrangements at Lloyd's, whose report was published in 1987 (Cm. 59), considered the position of Lloyd's with respect to the Financial Services Act. Its recommendations have been implemented, and are designed to improve accountability of syndicates to names.

CEN Committees

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what Government support is available to trade union representatives to attend and contribute to CEN standard-setting committees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: My Department funds, and the British Standards Institution (BSI) administers, the assisted international travel scheme. This scheme meets part of the travel costs of certain United Kingdom representatives, including trade union representatives, who act as delegation leaders or principal experts at standards-making meetings overseas. A fixed allowance, basically equivalent to 75 per cent. of the economy class air fare, is payable. The funding provided for 1990-91 is intended to be sufficient to meet, inter alia, all eligible claims for attendance at standards meetings of CEN.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Burglary and Theft

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people were sentenced for domestic burglary in England and Wales in each of the last five years for a term exceeding 10 years; and what proportion of the total number of people sentenced to prison for domestic burglary in those years they represent;

(2) how many people were sentenced for theft in England and Wales in each of the last five years for a term exceeding seven years; and what proportion of the total number of people sentenced to prison for theft in those years they represent.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is given in the table.

Persons sentenced to immediate custody

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
(a) Domestic burglary
Numbers sentenced to over 10 years	6	3	6	3	6
Percentage of all those sentenced to custody	0·05	0·03	0·06	0·03	0·08
(b) Theft
Numbers sentenced to over 7 years	2	1	—	2	1
Percentage of all those sentenced to custody	—	—	—	0·01	—

— Less than 0·01 per cent.

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide funds for missing persons support groups to run a helpline for those who have had friends or relatives go missing.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are considering a request from the Suzy Lamplugh Trust to fund such a helpline.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young people missing from their homes in other parts of the country are estimated by the Metropolitan police to be living in London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The only relevant figure available is the number of young people who have been reported missing to the Metropolitan police by other police forces in the United Kingdom. As at 7 December 1990, 357 such missing person reports were still outstanding.

These figures relate to all reports concerning missing young persons received from other police forces, and it is not possible to say in how many cases there was particular reason to believe that the subject of the report might be living in London.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Government have any plans to co-operate with other European nations through Interpol for international searches for missing persons, especially children and other vulnerable people.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The use of Interpol is an operational matter for the police. All forces are aware of the facilities provided by Interpol to assist them in their inquiries.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many scientific procedures were carried out on animals during 1989 in each of England, Scotland and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: Very full information is published annually in the "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals: Great Britain" (1989: Cm. 1152). To disaggregate these figures nationally might risk individual establishments being identified and the threat of violent attack is so real that we take care to protect confidentiality.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how the likely benefits of a scientific procedure are assessed when a project licence application under section 5(4) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 is considered; and whether any assessment is made of the value of the products and use;

(2) how many project licences have been issued in each of the last three years for the testing of cosmetics; and whether any assessment is made during the examination of the licence application of the utility of the product being tested.

Mrs. Rumbold: Section 5(4) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 requires that, before a project licence is granted, the likely adverse effects on the animals concerned must be weighed against the benefit likely to accrue from the proposed work. A number of factors contribute towards such assessments which must necessarily be subjective, and these are set out in chapter 4 of the Home Office "Guidance on the Operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986" (1990: HC 182).

As for project licences for the regulatory testing of substances, including cosmetics, the central benefit is ensuring that such substances do not present a hazard in manufacture or transport and are safe for use by the consumer. Since the Act came into force in 1987, a total of six project licences have been issued for the safety testing of cosmetics.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to accept any of the recommendations contained in the recent RSPCA/FRAME report on the use of non-human primates as laboratory animals in Britain.

Mrs. Rumbold: We share the underlying concerns of this report that non-human primates should not be used in scientific procedures unnecessarily and that where their use can be justified scientifically they should be adequately housed and cared for.

The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 recognises the special position of non-human primates and section 5(6) requires that they may be used only where no other species are suitable for a proposed programme of research. Government policy on the use of non-human primates was set out fully in response to a question on 16 November 1987 by my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) at columns 386-88. The special requirements of such animals are set out in the Home Office code of practice for the housing and care of laboratory animals (1989: HC 107).

As the RSPCA/FRAME report makes clear, much of the work covered by the survey was conducted before the special controls of the 1986 Act came into force and before the recommendations for housing and care were published in the code of practice.

Prison Suicides

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the review of suicide prevention management policies and procedures in prisons conducted by Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons.

Mrs. Rumbold: Shortly. Arrangements for publication are already in hand.

Remand

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now end the practice of holding mentally disturbed persons on remand in Brixton.

Mrs. Rumbold: The prison service is obliged to hold people who are remanded in custody by the courts, and it is the function of Brixton to deal with remand prisoners and trials from the London area. It is nevertheless the Government's policy that mentally disordered offenders should be diverted from the criminal justice system to the care of the health and social services except when custody is deemed to be in the public interest. This policy is reiterated in Home Office circular 66/70, a copy of which is in the Library.

Where custody cannot be avoided maximum use is made of the Mental Health Act to transfer those mentally disturbed inmates who require hospital treatment.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is (i) the number of inmates, (ii) the number on remand separately distinguishing the length in months they have been remanded, and (iii) the number serving sentences of longer than six months at (a) Cardiff and (b) Swansea prisons.

Mrs. Rumbold: (a) On 5 December 1990, the latest date for which this information is readily available, there were 438 inmates in Cardiff prison of which 206 were on remand. The length in months for which they have been remanded is as set out in the table:

	Number
Up to 3 months	159
4 to 6 months	44
7 to 9 months	0
Over 9 months	3

The number of inmates serving longer than six months is 37.

(b) On 5 December, the latest date for which this information is available, there were 266 inmates in Swansea prison, of which 98 were on remand. The length in months for which they have been remanded is set out in the table:

	Number
Up to 3 months	73
4 to 6 months	22
7 to 9 months	3
Over 9 months	0

The number of inmates serving longer than six months is 37.

Mental Handicap Homes

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the police release information to directors of social services of local authorities on any previous convictions of persons who apply for registration of privately owned homes that care for severely disturbed mentally handicapped persons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Except where there is a statutory obligation, the disclosure of police records is at the discretion of chief officers of police. In practice chief officers generally follow guidelines agreed by the Association of Chief Police Officers and issued in Home Office circulars.

In Wales, there are local arrangements between the police and local authorities which enable social services departments to obtain information about the criminal convictions of all applicants for registration under the Registered Homes Act 1984. Similar national arrangements are being set in place and are due to be implemented in April 1991. They will enable local authorities to obtain from the police details of convictions recorded against a potential owner or manager of a residential care or nursing home. The arrangements will cover both local authority and registered homes; and will apply to small homes once those homes are brought under regulatory control.

Fire Fighting

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to satisfy himself that the training requirements of the fire service will not jeopardise the continued availability of a local fire fighting crew on islands such as Holy Island.

Mr. John Patten: The Northumberland fire authority has a duty, under the Fire Services Acts, to ensure that appropriate standards of fire cover are maintained in its area and for the efficient training of members of its brigade. It also has obligations under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 to ensure that firefighters are adequately trained to meet the dangers of their work.

Fire cover on Holy Island is provided by a fire appliance operated by local volunteers augmented, where necessary, by firefighters from the mainland. I understand that the fire authority has been concerned that the volunteer firefighters are not adequately trained and that the authority may, as a result, be in breach of its statutory duties. The authority is considering, in discussion with the volunteers and other inhabitants of Holy Island, what further action it should take.

Data Protection

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs), Official Report, 28 November, column 418, he will list the organisations to which he is writing to invite comments on the EC draft directive on data protection; and if he will set out the criteria adopted by his Department in selecting these organisations.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are writing to United Kingdom organisations with a known interest in data protection issues. There are about 170; I am placing the list in the Library of the House. It is based on the data protection registrar's standard consultation list, together with other organisations which have approached us.

Weapons (EC Documents)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the implications for personal liberty and civil liberties arising from European Community documents Nos. 10074/89 and 8836/90 on the controls on the acquisition and possession of weapons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no reason to believe that the European Commission's proposal for a directive on the control of the acquisition and possession of weapons will have any implications for personal or civil liberties in Great Britain. But if the hon. Member wishes to draw to our attention any such implications which he considers may exist, we shall consider them carefully.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Trevi group has considered the security implications of European Community documents Nos. 10074/89 and 8836/90 on the control on the acquisition and possession of weapons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The draft directive on the control of the acquisition and possession of weapons is concerned with the legitimate possession and movements of arms within the Community. The general declaration on articles 13 to 19 of the Single European Act explicitly preserves the right of member states to take such measures as they consider necessary to combat terrorism and crime.

Public Events (Policing)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report as to the total cost of policing the Madonna concerts at Wembley in 1990; and how much the promoters of that event were charged for that policing (a) in actual amounts and (b) as a percentage of total policing costs;

(2) if he will call for a report as to the total cost of policing the Knebworth rock festival for each of the past 10 years; and how much the promoters of that event were charged for that policing (a) in actual amounts and (b) as a percentage of total policing costs;

(3) if he will call for a report as to the total cost of policing the Castle Donnington "Monsters of Rock" festival for each of the past 10 years; and how much the promoters of that event were charged for that policing (a) in actual amounts and (b) as a percentage of total policing costs;

(4) if he will call for a report as to the total cost of policing Ascot racecourse for each of the past 10 years; and how much Ascot was charged for this policing (a) in actual amounts and (b) as a percentage of total policing costs;

(5) if he will call for a report as to the total cost of policing the Glastonbury rock festival for each of the past 10 years; and how much the promoters of that event were charged for that policing (a) in actual amounts and (b) as a percentage of the total policing costs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Any charges under section 15 of the Police Act 1964 would have been a matter for the police authority concerned. No information on them is held centrally.

Football Spectators Act

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those sections of the Football Spectators Act not currently in force; and whether the Government have any current plans to bring each such section into force.

Mr. John Patten: There are no plans at present to bring into force subsections (3), (4)(b), (5) and (6) of section 1, sections 2 to 7 and subsections (6), (7), (8)(c) and 12(a) and (b) of section 10, all of which refer to a national membership scheme. The rest of the Act is currently in force with the exception of sections 9 and 13, about which I am replying separately to specific questions tabled by the hon. Member.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those parts of the Football Spectators Act currently in force and the dates on which they came into force.

Mr. John Patten: On 22 March 1990 the following provisions of the Act came into force:

(i) subsections (1), (2), (4) except paragraph (b), and (7) to (11) of section 1;
(ii) section 14, and
(iii) subsections (1), (9) and (12) of section 22.

On 24 April 1990 the following provisions of the Act came into force:

(i) sections 15 to 21;
(ii) subsections (2) to (8), (10) and (11) of section 22, and
(iii) sections 23 to 26 and schedule 1.

On 1 June 1990 the following provisions of the Act came into force:

(i) section 8 and schedule 2;
(ii) subsections (1) to (5), (8) except paragraph (c), (9) to (11), (12) except paragraphs (a) and (b), and (13) to (17) of section 10; and
(iii) sections 11 and 12.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to make an order bringing into force section 9 of the Football Spectators Act 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: An order bringing into effect section 9 of the Football Spectators Act 1989, which creates the offence of admitting spectators to unlicensed premises, will be made as soon as the Football Licensing Authority is in a position to issue licences for football grounds at which designated football matches are played. Both we and the Football Licensing Authority are of the view that the licensing scheme should be introduced as soon as it is practicable to do so, but it would be unrealistic to expect the authority to administer such a scheme effectively before it has acquired the necessary staff and expertise to do so.

Football Licensing Authority

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total amount of funding made available to the Football Licensing Authority to date; what is his best estimate of the resources required by the Football Licensing Authority over the coming year; and what level of funding he will make available to the Football Licensing Authority for the next year.

Mr. John Patten: The approved provision for the Football Licensing Authority for the current financial year is £670,000. We have been advised by the authority that its actual expenditure in the period to the end of March 1991 is unlikely to exceed £270,000. Provision has been made in the public expenditure survey for the 1991-92 financial year for grant in aid to the authority of a maximum of £898,000. This represents an increase of £208,000 on the PES provision originally approved for 1991-92, before the role of the authority was reviewed in the light of Lord Justice Taylor's final report on the Hillsborough stadium disaster.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to increase funding for the Football Licensing Authority for fulfilling its functions under section 13 of the Football Spectators Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No. Neither we nor the Football Licensing Authority have any reason to believe that the funding provision already made for the Football Licensing Authority will be inadequate to enable it properly to discharge all its statutory functions, including those under section 13 of the Football Spectators Act 1989, when that section of the Act is brought into force.

Conferences (Policing)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report as to the cost of policing the Police Federation conference for each of the past 10 years; and how much the federation was charged for that policing (a) in actual amounts and (b) as a percentage of total policing costs;

(2) if he will call for a report as to the cost of policing the Association of Chief Police Officers conference for each of the past 10 years; and how much the association was charged for that policing (a) in actual amounts and (b) as a percentage of total policing costs;

(3) if he will call for a report as to the cost of policing the Police Superintendents Association conference for each of the past 10 years; and how much the association was charged for that policing (a) in actual amounts and (b) as a percentage of total policing costs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Any charges made under section 15 of the Police Act 1964 would have been a matter for the police authority concerned. No information on them is held centrally.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report as to the total cost of policing the Labour party conference for each of the past 10 years; and how much the Labour party was charged for that policing (a) in actual amounts and (b) as a percentage of total policing costs;

(2) if he will call for a report as to the total cost of policing the Conservative party conference for each of the past 10 years; and how much the Conservative party was charged for that policing (a) in actual amounts and (b) as a percentage of total policing costs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief officers of the forces concerned that the additional costs of policing the Conservative and Labour party conferences from 1987 onwards were estimated as follows:

Conservative

Force	Year	Additional cost £
Lancashire	1987	829,000
Sussex	1988	1,400,000
Lancashire	1989	1,080,000
Dorset	1990	2,000,000

Labour

Force	Year	Additional cost £
Sussex	1987	23,000
Lancashire	1988	61,000
Sussex	1989	4,000
Lancashire	1990	97,545

Previous figures are not held centrally. No contribution to these costs was made by the political parties concerned. The level of policing is a matter for the chief constable concerned, having regard to the threat and all other relevant circumstances.

Young Offenders

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many youngsters of 15 and 16 years of age have been held in Welsh prisons during the past year (a) on unruly behaviour certificates or (b) in other circumstances.

Mrs. Rumbold: Statistics on certificates of unruliness are not collected centrally. The readily available information is given in the table.

Males[1] aged under 17 who were first received on remand under sentence into prison service establishments in Wales[2]: by type of reception and age, 1989

Type of reception	Aged 15	Aged 16
Unsentenced	27	39
Sentenced	3	11

[1] Total receptions cannot be calculated by adding both categories because a person received as an unsentenced prisoner may also subsequently be received after sentence.
[2] Usk YOI and Cardiff and Swansea prisons.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to end the practice of remanding 15 or 16-year-old boys to adult prisons pending trial or sentence.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the policy of holding 15 and 16-year-olds in Welsh prisons on unruly behaviour certificates.

Mr. John Patten: I would refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to questions from the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 3 December at columns 11-12.

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Home Office purchasing information systems do not differentiate between acquiring and commissioning goods and services. However, information on departmental purchasing expenditure from 1986-87 is set out in the annual reports of the Central Unit on Purchasing, copies of which are available in the Library.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Figures for expenditure on advertising and other promotional material for the years from 1986-87 to 1990-91 are as follows:

Year	Total advertising expenditure (all media) £ million	Production and distribution of other promotional material £ million
1986-87	5·0	1·4
1987-88	4·7	2·1
1988-89	5·4	2·8
1989-90	5·5	3·7
1990-91[1]	8·4	4·2

[1] Provisional.

It would not be possible to provide more detailed information on advertising expenditure except at disproportionate cost.

Golden Globe Charitable Trust

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ask the Charity Commissioners to inquire into the affairs of the Golden Globe Charitable Trust; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: This is a matter for the Charity Commission. I understand that the commissioners have received no complaints about the administration of the Golden Globe Charitable Trust and that they have no evidence to justify launching an investigation. If the hon. Member is aware of any matters giving cause for concern I urge him to write to the chief charity commissioner.

HEALTH

Purchasing

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the purchasing policy of his Department.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department is bound by the Government's policy that purchasers should base all procurement of goods and services on value for money, including quality (or fitness for purpose) and delivery against price. In accordance with that policy, goods and services are acquired by competitive tendering unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Under EC rules, and the GATT Government procurement agreement (GPA) where appropriate, the Department is obliged to award contracts in accordance with prescribed procedures aimed at avoiding discrimination on grounds of nationality.

Rape (HIV)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women in the United Kingdom are known to have tested seropositive for HIV subsequent to their being raped.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on rape is not requested as part of the surveillance system for HIV antibody positive reporting. Information supplied spontaneously to the public health laboratory service communicable disease surveillance centre reported two women who were tested HIV antibody positive subsequent to reported rape in England and Wales. However, from the information supplied it cannot be determined whether HIV infection was acquired through rape. No such cases have been reported to the communicable disease (Scotland) unit.

Nursing and Midwifery Colleges

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proposals are being considered for the transfer of responsibility for any colleges of nursing and midwifery to the Secretary of State for Education and Science;

(2) what proposals are being considered for centralising colleges of nursing and midwifery on a regional basis;

(3) if he will make it his policy to publish proposals for the protection of employment for teaching staff before any proposals are made to alter departmental responsibility for colleges of nursing and midwifery.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans for transferring responsibility for colleges of nursing and midwifery from this Department to the Department of Education and Science, or for centralising colleges of nursing and midwifery on a regional basis. The English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting has, however, encouraged the amalgamation of schools of nursing and midwifery to produce larger institutions with a wider range of resources. Schools have also been encouraged to develop links with further education and higher education institutions and in a few instances there has been full integration with such an institution. In such cases the implications for the staff of the school would be for local management to resolve.

Alternative Medicine

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what branches of complementary and alternative medicine national health service patients have access.

Mr. Dorrell: Practitioners registered with the General Medical Council may offer their patients any form of treatment, including the use of complementary therapies. There is evidence that such practitioners are making increasing use of techniques such as osteopathy, acupuncture and homeopathy.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available to national health service patients about access to alternative therapies and medicine.

Mr. Dorrell: Patients considering alternative therapies and medicines should first consult their general practitioner who is in the best position to make a clinical judgment on the most appropriate form of treatment.

Southampton General Hospital

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the number of patients on waiting lists for the Southampton general hospital by specialty.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information by individual hospital is not available centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Professor J. B. L. Howell, the chairman of Southampton and South West Hampshire health authority, for the relevant information.

National Health Service Trusts

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that there will be no victimisation of employees of the health service who publicly opposed self-governing trusts; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is no question of anyone being victimised because they publicly opposed self-governing trusts.

Private Residential Homes

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 20 November, Official Report, column 99, on private residential homes, if he will break down the figures given by local authority.

Mr. Dorrell: The local authorities and health authorities which reported the cancellations of registrations of persons running residential care and nursing homes detailed in that answer were:

[1] Includes 2 cases relating to 1989 omitted in error in the answer given on 20 November.

The corrected figures for the reasons for the cancellations reported in 1989 are:

the fitness of persons involved in running the home: 38 cases the fitness of premises, or their staffing: 6 cases the conduct of the home or services or facilities provided: 24 cases conviction of an offence under the Registered Homes Act 1984: 1 case urgent closure on application to a Justice of the Peace: 7 cases

In a number of cases, more than one reason was cited.

General Practitioners

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by regional health authority area, those general practitioner practices which have been granted fund-holding status.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Formal granting of fund-holding status by regional health authorities is not expected to begin before January 1991.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether general practitioners are required to balance their budgets by March 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At present general practitioners do not have "budgets". The general practitioner fund-holding scheme, which commences on 1 April 1991, will allow eligible practices to volunteer to receive a sum of money to purchase a range of services for their patients. Non fund-holding practices, from 1 April 1991, will be assigned an indicative prescribing amount which will relate to their drug expenditure. The indicative prescribing amount will, however, be a financial benchmark and not a cash limit.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has indicating trends in expenditure from general practitioners' budgets for drugs.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The indicative prescribing scheme under which general practitioners will be set amounts for anticipated expenditure on drugs comes into operation on 1 April 1991. Since the introduction of PACT (prescribing analyses and cost system) in August 1988 there has been a slowdown in the rate of increase of the cost of drugs prescribed by general practitioners.

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service for employees within his Department, stating (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mr. Dorrell: All civil service departments and agencies have access to the services of the Civil Service Occupational Health Service which employs some 100 fully qualified occupational health professionals, doctors, nurses and hygiene and safety advisers. It operates through a network of regional offices throughout the United Kingdom. On 1 November 1990 the Department had 5,002 employees.

Grading Appeals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice has been given or will be given to health authorities in respect of successful outstanding clinical grading appeals where there is an existing overspend.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The costs of successful clinical grading appeals are one of many factors which health authorities recognise in managing their budget for the year. The Department is not intending to issue specific guidance on this.

Patient Transport

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health or ambulance service authorities are known to be generating income by charging for patient transport services; and in each case, how much income is so generated.

Mr. Dorrell: In the year 1989-90, 31 ambulance authorities showed figures for income from charging for patient transport services. The figure for each authority is shown in the table. All figures are subject to audit and are therefore provisional.

Hormone Replacement Therapy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of general practitioner-prescribed hormone replacement therapy treatments in each of the standard regions; and if he will express this cost as a figure per head of female population over 40 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is as follows:

Net ingredient cost (NIC) of hormone replacement therapy treatments in 1989

Regional health authority	NIC thousands £	Female population 40 and over	Cost/Head £
Northern	1,419	742,946	1·91

Notes:

1. The estimates are based on a sample of prescriptions of approximately 1 in 200 in England which were dispensed by community pharmacists.

2. The population data has been extracted from OPCS estimates.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to reach conclusions about the costs and benefits of long-term hormone replacement therapy.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department is funding a research project by Professor Martin Vessey of Oxford university, who is examining the costs and benefits of hormone replacement therapy in relation to the menopause. Professor Vessey's study is expected to be completed in early 1992.

Life Insurance

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government have taken since the publication in November 1989 of their response to the seventh report of the Select Committee on Social Services, Session 1988-89, to consider with the insurance industry the effect of asking proposers for life insurance whether they have ever had an HIV test.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since we published our response to the Select Committee report, officials have had a number of meetings with representatives of the Association of British Insurers (ABI,) to discuss the effect of HIV test questions on proposal forms for life insurance. I met Michael Pickard, the chairman of the Life Insurance Council of the ABI, and his colleagues on 12 November. We discussed the possible effects of the ABI's recommended procedures and the need to ensure that people were not dissuaded from coming forward for testing, help and advice about HIV infection. We have, jointly with the ABI, commissioned the British Market Research Bureau (BMRB) to carry out a survey of public perceptions of the effect of the questions. The BMRB is currently in the process of interviewing experts, advice workers, the general public and young adults. We expect to receive the results early in the new year, when further meetings with the ABI are planned.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department of Health's budget for communications and publicity includes provision for nurse recruitment, blood donor recruitment and drug misuse campaigns.

Information for the years 1985-86 to 1987-88 is not available in the form requested.

Expenditure by the Department's information division for 1988-89 is as follows:

	£ million
Press advertising	1·196
TV and radio advertising	1·867
Other advertising	0·661
Other material (including approximately £250,000 for videos and sound cassettes)	7·075

	£ million
Expenditure for 1989-90 is as follows:
Press advertising	2·739
TV and radio advertising	3·676
Other advertising	0·865
Other material (including approximately £200,000 for videos and sound cassettes)	9·964

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: Departmental purchasing information systems do not differentiate between costs of acquiring and commissioning goods and services. However, information on total departmental expenditure on goods and services from 1986-87 onwards is set out in the annual reports of the Central Unit on Purchasing, copies of which are available in the Library. For years prior to 1989-90 it was not possible to differentiate Department of Health expenditure within the overall Department of Health and Social Security total.

North Derbyshire Health Authority

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what honorarium is paid to each member of North Derbyshire health authority; and how many meetings it is due to hold each year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Non-executive members of district health authorities receive an honorarium of £5,000 per annum. It is for individual health authorities to determine how often they should meet. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact Mr. R. B. Robinson, chairman of North Derbyshire health authority, for this information.

Health Research

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) in cash terms and (b) deflated according to an appropriate index of higher education pay and prices the spending on health and personal social services research in each year from 1979 to the most recent year which his Department has funded in universities, polytechnics and other related institutions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Spending on health and personal social services research in England and Wales for 1989-90, the latest for which outturn figures are available, was £15·4 million.

Information for earlier years has been published in the Cabinet Office annual review of Government-funded research and development, copies of which are available in the Library.

HIV

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from organisations and individuals in respect of an out-of-court settlement for people who have contracted HIV through national health service infected blood or blood products.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to the reply, 16 November 1990, c. 248]: The steering committee of solicitors representing the HIV haemophiliac plaintiffs and their counsel have put forward to the Department of Health proposals for the settlement of this litigation which they regard as a fair and reasonable resolution of the plaintiffs' claims.

The Government have carefully considered these proposals and agree that they will provide a fair and proper way of ending this litigation and of making financial provision for all affected haemophiliacs and their dependants, whether or not they have joined in the litigation. We believe that our case is legally strong and that the plaintiffs would not succeed in proving negligence on the part of the Department of Health. None the less the Government have always recognised the very special and tragic circumstances of the haemophiliacs infected by HIV and of their families. We recognise too the harrowing effect legal action would have on them.

The Government have therefore agreed in principle to meet the steering committee's proposals.

In outline the compromise would result in the Government providing to the Macfarlane Trust, in addition to the £34 million already paid, a further sum of about £42 million for distribution to all HIV haemophiliacs and their families according to their respective circumstances. Furthermore, the Government have agreed that payments from the Macfarlane Trust will not affect entitlement to social security and other statutory benefits. The plaintiffs' reasonable legal costs would also be paid by the Government.

Because the proposed settlement will require the formal approval of all individual plaintiffs, and in the case of minors, of the court, it would be inappropriate at this time to publish further details until all plaintiffs and the court have had an opportunity to consider the full terms of the settlement and to approve them.

The Government would apply the outcome of any settlement to all parts of the United Kingdom.

The Government welcome these developments, which offer a speedy way of ending the lengthy period of uncertainty for haemophiliacs and their families and of giving them additional financial security.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Official IRA

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information his Department has on whether the Official IRA continues to exist in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I believe that the Official IRA still exists.

Health Research

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list (a) in cash terms and (b) deflated according to an appropriate index of higher education pay and prices the spending on health and personal social services research in each year from 1979 to the most recent year which his Department has funded in universities, polytechnics and other related institutions.

Mr. Hanley: Spending by the Department of Health and Social Services on health and personal social services research in Northern Ireland for 1989-90, the latest year for which an outturn figure is available, was £0·83 million.

Information for earlier years has been published in the appropriation accounts for Northern Ireland Departments.

Home Help

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many individuals currently in receipt of home help service receive (a) less than one hour per day, (b) less than two hours but more than one hour per day, (c) less than three hours but more than two hours per day and (d) more than three hours per day;

(2) how many individuals currently in receipt of home help service receive a daily allocation of home help time Monday to Saturday but no service on Sunday;

(3) how many individuals currently in receipt of home help service receive a daily allocation of home help time Monday to Friday but no service on Saturday and Sunday;

(4) what was the average amount of home help time received, per day, by each individual in receipt of home help service in each year since 1986, in each health board area in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley [holding answers 4 December 1990]: The information requested could be made available only at disproportionate cost to the health and social services boards which are responsible for the management and delivery of the home help service.

ENVIRONMENT

Private Rented Housing

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the private rented housing market since the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Yeo: It is too early to assess the overall impact of the Act on private renting. Research now in progress will provide information in the course of 1991. There are, however, clear signs of increased activity in the residential lettings market. In particular, business expansion scheme companies have so far raised £550 million, which will provide about 10,000 new homes to rent.

Bathing Beaches

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the National Rivers Authority reports covering all of England and Wales which provide information on the bathing beaches monitoring programme for the 1990 bathing season.

Mr. Baldry: The Secretary of State announced on 14 November that a detailed summary of these National Rivers Authority monitoring results will be placed in the Library.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in view of the decision by South Yorkshire waste disposal joint committee to close its hazardous waste unit, he proposes to exercise his powers under section 31 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Baldry: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution expects to submit a report to the Secretary of State shortly on the arrangements for waste regulation in South Yorkshire. My right hon. Friend will wish to consider this carefully before deciding whether it would be appropriate to use his powers under section 10 of the Local Government Act 1985 to set up a metropolitan waste authority for the area. He has no intention at this stage of using his powers under section 31 of the Environmental Protection Act to set up a regional waste authority.

Home Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the real rate of increase in house prices in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany, (c) France and (d) Italy since 1985.

Mr. Yeo: House prices in the United Kingdom increased by 101 per cent. between 1985 and the third quarter of 1990, as measured by the Department of the Environment's index. Information about house prices in the other three counties is not regularly received in the Department.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to review his proposed standard spending assessments for 1991-92 for (a) the London borough of Westminster and (b) the London borough of Wandsworth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: All authorities are treated on the same basis for the purposes of calculating standard spending assessments. We are at present considering all representations received in respect of the proposals for revenue support grant in 1991-92 set out in the statement of 31 October. We will announce final decisions shortly.

Benzene

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the total amount of benzene emitted to the atmosphere by combustion engines in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: Benzene emissions into the atmosphere have been estimated by the Harwell laboratory in a report: "Hydrocarbon involvement in Photochemical Ozone in Europe, AERE-R 13736". Copies of the report have been deposited in the Library of the House. In 1987 total benzene emissions for the United Kingdom amounted to about 36,000 tonnes, of which 61 per cent. has been attributed to petrol vehicle exhaust, 21 per cent. from the evaporation of motor spirit and 10 per cent. from diesel vehicle exhaust.

Vacant Land

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement, further to the consultation paper "Encouraging the Use of Vacant Public Land", as to the particular functions and the timescale which would be accepted by him as constituting sufficient grounds on which to regard development plans as being firm.

Mr. Yeo: Deciding whether an owner's plans are sufficiently firm to make the issue of a direction undesirable is essentially a matter of judgment, taking all relevant factors, including the owner's purpose and the timescale of the proposed development, into account. My right hon. Friend will consider each case on its merits.

Red-eared Terrapins

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to discourage the importation for sale of red-eared terrapins as domestic pets.

Mr. Baldry: At present, there are no conservation reasons for restricting the importation of red-eared terrapins, because there is no evidence that they are endangered, or are becoming endangered in the wild. We are, however, currently discussing with our European partners a new EC regulation to replace regulation 3626/82, which implements the convention on international trade in endangered species (CITES) within the European Community; and we shall ensure that the question whether red-eared terrapins should be brought within the control of this regulation is given careful consideration.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has received regarding ecological damage caused by red-eared terrapins, formerly domestic pets, which have been released into the wild.

Mr. Baldry: I am not aware of any evidence of ecological damage caused by red-eared terrapins being released into the wild in Britain.

Planning Legislation

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what decisions he has made on the proposals in his Department's April 1990 consultation paper, "Miscellaneous Amendments to Subordinate Planning Legislation".

Mr. Yeo: After careful consideration of all the responses to the consultation paper, "Miscellaneous Amendments to Subordinate Planning Legislation", the Government have decided to proceed with the following proposals:

(a) to include a statement of owners' property rights on the form which applicants for planning permission are required to serve on the owners and others with an interest in the land;

(b) to grant permitted development rights to licensed operators of driver information systems to install the requisite equipment, subject to limitations governing size and height;

(c) to amend the restriction on the use of factory and warehouse extensions built under the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 to allow their use for social, welfare and recreational uses ancillary to the main function of the site;

(d) to include dry cleaning establishments in the Shops class (A1) of the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) Order 1987.

The Government have decided not to proceed with the following proposals:

(i) to grant permitted development rights for postal pouch boxes;

(ii) to grant permitted development rights for the installation of liquefied gas tanks in the curtilage of dwellinghouses;

(iii) to include launderettes in the Shops class (A1) of the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) Order 1987.

Amending orders reflecting these decisions will be laid before Parliament shortly.

Running Costs

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer given to the hon. Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) on 8 November, Official Report, columns 15-16, if he will make a further statement on his Department's running costs limit for 1990-91.

Mr. Heseltine: I regret that the calculation of the cumulative changes in my Department's running costs limit across the votes concerned contained an error. The running costs limit has, in fact, been increased by £4,296,000 from £153,458,000 to £157,754,000.

Doncaster Metropolitan Borough Council

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposed to take in regard to Doncaster metropolitan borough council under part I of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has today issued a direction under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988 requiring Doncaster metropolitan borough council to expose certain building cleaning work to competitive tendering again by 1 November 1991. He has taken this action because he was not satisfied with the response which Doncaster metropolitan borough council made to the notice served on 21 September 1990 under section 13 of the Act.

That notice set out the Secretary of State's view that Doncaster metropolitan borough council had acted contrary to the requirement of section 7(7) of the act (which is that, in awarding a contract, an authority must not act in a manner having the effect or intended or likely to have the effect of restricting, distorting or preventing competition) in that, in putting building cleaning work out to tender with a start date for contracts of 1 September 1990, they packaged the work and adopted a timetable for the tendering in an anti-competitive manner. The Secretary of State has decided to take no further action in the case of the so-called north, east and west area contracts. His direction relates to building cleaning work comprised in the so-called south area contract, which is the largest of the four area contracts put out to tender.

Protected Species

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of licences issued under section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to destroy protected species in 1989 and 1990, the different species they were issued for and the number for each species.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 27 November 1990]: I will write to the hon. Member.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each local authority (i) the amount of capital receipts generated in 1988-89 and 1989-90 and (ii) the amount available from these receipts for capital projects with totals for each class of authority and England as a whole.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 10 December 1990]: I have today arranged for the available information to be placed in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Students

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students in receipt of grant withdrew from their course in institutions on higher education in the past full academic year; what was the total grant involved; and if he will express that figure as a percentage of all grant awards made.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of 1,634 students in receipt of a maintenance grant under the students' allowances scheme withdrew from their courses during academic session 1989-90. The maintenance grant payments made to them amounted to £1,778,885, which represents 2·03 per cent. of all maintenance payments made in respect of that academic session.

Health and Social Services Research

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) in cash terms and (b) deflated according to an appropriate index of higher education pay and prices, the spending on health and personal social services research in each year from 1979 to the most recent year which his Department has funded in universities, polytechnics and other related institutions.

Mr. Lang: Spending on health and personal social services research in Scotland for 1989-90, the latest for which outturn figures are available, was £5·7 million.

Information for earlier years has been published in the Cabinet Office annual review of Government-funded research and development.

AIDS

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total sum spent by his Department on research into human AIDS.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of £1·1 million.

Road Works

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to increase the amount of local authority general road works that is subject to competitive tender.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend and I consider that additional competition for roads work will be beneficial in securing better value for money. We have therefore decided to increase from 30 per cent. to 60 per cent. the minimum proportion of the aggregate value of road jobs costing £25,000 or less which must be put out to competitive tender by local authorities in Scotland under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. Our decision will bring arrangements in Scotland in line with those which have been in force in England and Wales since 1 April 1988. I shall be laying the necessary regulations to give effect to this change which is to come into operation from 1 April 1991.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information the Scottish Office is gathering on the impact of Scottish students of the poll tax in order to evaluate the policy and to prepare new legislation.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 7 December 1990]: For the purposes of the recently announced review of the community charge, my right hon. Friend will be considering to what extent he needs to supplement the information already available to him about the position of students, as about other relevant aspects.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report by region the actual average non-domestic rate valuation increases resulting from the 1990 revaluation.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 7 December 1990] The percentage change in the aggregate rateable value in each regional and islands area between 1 April 1989 and 1 April 1990 is shown in the table. Although the major cause of the increases will have been the revaluation of non-domestic property which took effect on 1 April 1990, other factors such as additions to and deletions from the valuation roll will also be reflected in the figures.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by region the average increases in non-domestic rate valuations on which he calculated the Scottish average valuation increase for adjusting the non-domestic rate poundages in the current year.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 7 December 1990]: The non-domestic rates prescribed for 1990-91 were not determined using regional average increases in rateable values but by applying the average increase in rateable values for Scotland as a whole. The factor used was based on estimates provided by regional assessors, the Treasury valuer and the assessor of public undertakings (Scotland), supplemented with a sample survey undertaken by regional assessors at the request of the Scottish Office. An adjustment was made to reflect the change in the level of industrial derating. Disaggregation of the estimates by regions gives the values shown in the table. The figure for Fife is lower than it should be because of an error in the apportionment of the rateable value of the electricity companies among regions which was corrected before the new valuation roll came into effect. This had no effect on the factor used to determine non-domestic rates for 1990-91.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many persons who have been found eligible for relief under the Personal Community Charge (Relief) (No. 2) (Scotland) Regulations 1990 were dead prior to the coming into force of the said regulations;

(2) how many persons, to date, have been eligible to have their liability to pay the personal community charge reduced for the financial year 1989-90, by virtue of the Personal Community Charge (Relief) (No. 2) (Scotland) Regulations 1990, in each local authority area in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1990]: Details of the numbers of persons eligible for relief under these regulations are still awaited from local authorities. Where a person died prior to the coming into force of the regulations, payment of relief may be made to the executor of the deceased's estate, where the other criteria for entitlement to relief have been met. Returns from authorities to the Department are not required to identify such cases separately.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, in reviewing the poll tax, he will bring forward proposals to end the joint and several liability for spouses' poll tax debts.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1990]: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that the forthcoming review will consider all aspects of the community charge arrangements.

Football Spectators

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of criminal proceedings currently in progress in Scotland involving alleged offences by persons from England or Wales which correspond to offences contained in schedule 1 of the Football Spectators Act 1989; when is the likely date of completion of each of these proceedings; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 December 1990]: There is one such case currently in progress in Scotland. No date has yet been fixed for it to call in court.

Lothian Health Board

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has anything to add to the reply of 21 November, Official Report, column 285, in the light of representations from the British Medical Association and the area medical committee concerning their reactions to Lothian health board's proposals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 7 December 1990]: In response to Lothian health board's consultation document, the Lothian area medical committee in its letter of 16 July gave a clear statement of support for the concentration of paediatric medical and surgical services, of neurosurgery, of urological services and of accident and emergency services, and the movement as proposed of respiratory medicine, rheumatology and lithotripsy. This represents a substantial proportion of the board's proposals.

The committee also expressed concern that the proposals would result in a reduction in the quality and quantity of clinical care. Both I and my right hon. Friend have acknowledged that some specialties will be temporarily inconvenienced during the implementation of the changes. In the longer term a new pattern of acute hospital services will be created to allow the more efficient use of medical and nursing staff, as well as of buildings and facilities.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the projects and centres to which his Department has contributed financially in respect of research into alcohol misuse, with the figure for each such project or centre in the present financial year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 10 December 1990]: The information is as follows:

Project Title	Project co-ordinators	Grant in 1990-91 £
Evaluation of a home detoxification service.	Forth Valley Health Board	1,000
Antibody Against Acetaldehyde—Protein adducts as possible aversion treatments for modifying alcohol consumatory behaviour and as new tools for identifying chronic alcohol consumption.	Aberdeen University	10,000
Literature review on alcohol and young people	Law School, University of Strathclyde.	4,000

In addition, the Scottish Home and Health Department has provided funding of £95,000 in 1990-91 towards the cost of the research unit in health and behavioural change at Edinburgh university. Alcohol misuse is one of a range of factors studied by the unit which directly or indirectly cause ill-health.

Afforestation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that afforestation projects involve the planting of indigenous, ecologically important species of trees.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 10 December 1990]: The Forestry Commission normally requires a proportion of the trees in any afforestation project under the woodland grant scheme to be broadleaved, and these are often indigenous species. Higher rates of planting grant are available for broadleaved trees and last year over 75 per cent. of the trees planted under the farm woodland scheme and nearly 25 per cent. of all the trees planted under the woodland grant scheme were broadleaved. In Scotland, the Forestry Commission has special grants to encourage the establishment of new native pinewoods.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will encourage the development of natural woodland by a process of long-term set-aside of land for colonisation by indigenous trees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 10 December 1990]: Through the woodland grant scheme, the Forestry Commission encourages the owners of suitable land to set aside areas for the natural regeneration of indigenous trees. Grants are available for this purpose under the scheme.

RECHAR Programme

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the implementation of the EC RECHAR programme to support areas in Scotland affected by the closure of coal mines; and what funds are being made available by his Department in addition to previous spending plans to ensure that full advantage is taken of that programme in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1990]: Proposals for RECHAR programmes in eastern and western Scotland were submitted by the Government to the European Commission on 27 July. Decisions are awaited. Assuming the Commission grants money to the Scottish programmes, the Government will ensure that the provisions of the Community regulations on additionality are fully met.

Health Service

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the formula whereby the Greater Glasgow health board calculates the reimbursement of ancillary staff salaries to general practices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 10 December 1990]: This is a matter for Greater Glasgow health board, within the terms of the statement of fees and allowances.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the proceeds of the sale of the Scottish Development Agency property portfolio in 1990-91; and how these proceeds have been used.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1990]: Receipts for the period 1 April 1990 to 30 November 1990 in respect of all disposals of property amount to £58·5 million. These proceeds, taken together with the agency's general business receipts and with grant-in-aid provision, are being used to finance the agency's gross expenditure during the year.

Mental Handicap Nursing

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what advice he has given to local authorities in Scotland regarding the maintenance and professional role of those nurses with mental handicap training in Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what specific future role there is for nurses with mental handicap training in the new arrangements for community care in Scotland;

(2) what specific future role there is for nurses with mental handicap training in the new arrangements for the national health service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 10 December 1990]: Nurses with mental handicap training will continue to fulfil a vital role in the provision of specialised health services for people with mental handicaps. Although over time, some of these nurses may change their place of work, they will continue to be required to provide skilled care for people with severe or profound handicaps whether living in institutions or the community where they will often be members of community mental handicap teams. In addition, hospitals, although reduced in size, will continue to provide care for a substantial number of patients for the foreseeable future. In due course local authorities will make their own decisions on the skill mix and the staffing levels required for their services and any necessary central guidance will be issued at the appropriate time.

Training

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland at 1990-91 figures, how much was spent on youth training in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and how much will be spent in 1991-92 in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1990]: Expenditure on youth training in Scotland in 1989-90 at 1990-91 prices was £110,976,000.

Figures for expenditure on youth training in Scotland for the year 1990-91 will not be available until after the end of that financial year.

Budgets for expenditure on youth training in Scotland in 1991-92 have yet to be finalised and will in due course be published in grant-in-aid tables in the supply estimates for the regional and general industrial support, Scotland vote (class XV vote 3) for 1991-92.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland at 1990-91 figures, how much was spent on employment training in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and how much will be spent in 1991-92 in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1990]: Expenditure on employment training in Scotland in 1989-90 at 1990-91 prices was £133,686,000.

Figures for expenditure on employment training in Scotland in 1990-91 will not be available until after the end of that financial year.

Budgets for expenditure on employment training in Scotland in 1991-92 have yet to be finalised and will in due course be published in the grant-in-aid tables in the supply estimates for the regional and general industrial support, Scotland vote (class XV vote 3) for 1991-92.

Agency Funding

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the gross provision for the Scottish Development Agency in every year since 1979 and the non-training element of Scottish Enterprise for 1991-92 expressed at 1990-91 price levels.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1990]: The information is set out in the table:

	£ million
1979-80	174·8
1980-81	178·8
1981-82	162·9
1982-83	191·2
1983-84	172·6
1984-85	167·0
1985-86	176·2
1986-87	170·1
1987-88	166·9
1988-89	163·9
1989-90	171·0
1990-91	[1]129·0
1991-92	[2]170·0

[1] Estimated.
[2] Planned.

Planned provision for 1991-92 is not directly comparable to provision for earlier years because it reflects an adjustment to the division of responsibility for environmental improvements between Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise, as compared with that which has existed between the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will itemise how the budget of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise in 1991-92 are made up in terms of grant in aid, property income, equity income, training and other items.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1990]: The composition of the budgets of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise for 1991-92 has yet to be finalised and is under discussion with the two bodies. The information will be shown in due course in grant-in-aid tables published as part of the supply estimates for the regional and general industrial support Scotland vote (class XV vote 3) for 1991-92.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the gross provision for the Highlands and Islands Development Board for 1991-92, expressed at 1990-91 price levels.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1990]: The Highlands and Islands Development Board will be replaced by Highlands and Islands Enterprise on 1 April 1991. As well as taking over the functions of the Highlands and Islands Development Board, Highlands and Islands Enterprise will take over the Scottish Development Agency environmental function and the Training Agency's functions in the Highlands and Islands area. The notional amount allocated to former Highlands and Islands Development Board functions for 1991-92, expressed at 1990-91 price levels, is £50·4 million.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disabled People

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people will receive disability working allowance because they were receiving (a) invalidity benefit alone, (b) severe disablement allowance alone and (c) a disability premium with income-related benefits within eight weeks before claiming disability working allowance.

Mr. Scott: Estimates of the likely case load of disability working allowance can be only tentative. Our best estimate is that, once the benefit is established, about 50,000 people will receive DWA at any given point. Of these, around 25 per cent. will have been getting invalidity benefit (but not income support) before claiming DWA; 10 per cent. will have been getting severe disablement allowance (but not income support) before claiming; and 35 per cent. will have been getting an income-related benefit with a disability premium (alone or with invalidity benefit or severe disablement allowance) before claiming. A further 30 per cent. will already be in work and will qualify because they have disability living allowance. Of the first two categories a number will have been receiving housing benefit or community charge benefit.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to extend financial assistance available to disabled people with special dietary needs.

Mr. Scott: The OPCS surveys showed that the existing extra costs benefits are providing good coverage of people with all sorts of disabilities, including people with eating, drinking and digestion disorders. The new disability living allowance with its lower rates will extend this to people not currently receiving benefit.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish estimates of the extra expenditure in gross and net terms if no tariff income from capital was taken into account in calculation of disability working allowance.

Mr. Scott: Estimates of the likely expenditure on disability working allowance (DWA) have been based on assumptions about behavioural changes among people who have a continuing entitlement to a long-term incapacity benefit, but who might take the opportunity offered by DWA to do some work. As a result, the projections can be only tentative and it is not possible to estimate with confidence the extra expenditure, either in gross or net terms, if no tariff income from capital was taken into account.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the average potential gains in income for recipients of the disability working allowance.

Mr. Scott: Disability working allowance will ensure that the great majority of potential recipients will be better off in work than they would be on incapacity benefits. However, it is not possible to predict with confidence the average gain in income for recipients.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions were held with the National Federation of Self Employed and Small Businesses Ltd. in respect of employers' liability to fund SSP payments on the introduction of statutory sick pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Ministers held a series of meetings with representatives of small business organisations, including the National Federation of Self Employed and Small Businesses, prior to the introduction of statutory sick pay (SSP). Among the matters discussed at those meetings was the method of compensating employers for payments of SSP.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make extra funds available for community care grants for his Department's local office in Perry Barr, Birmingham.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Consumer Goods

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has on the acquisition and ownership of consumer goods by pensioners in 1974, 1979 and 1990.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on ownership of selected goods is given in the table. The data have been calculated using published data from the family expenditure survey. The year 1989 is the latest year for which these figures are currently available.

Percentage of pensioner households with goods

	1974	1979	1989
Telephone	32·0	49·8	85·7
Central heating	31·9	43·2	70·1
Fridge	65·2	84·0	96·6
Washing machine	45·6	55·5	71·4
Television	89·5	94·1	98·0
Car	20·6	23·1	37·9

Note: This covers the following types of households: one adult retired households mainly dependent on state pensions; one man and one woman retired households mainly dependent on state pensions; other retired households containing one adult; other retired households containing one man and one woman.

Youth Training (Income Support)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of youth training trainees in receipt of income support during 1988-89 and 1989-90; and what was the average size of income support payments to youth training trainees in each of those two years.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available.

State Pension Scheme

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will express the cost of the Government's scheme on opting out of the state earnings-related pension scheme (a) in cost terms, (b) in terms of the pence reduction equivalent in income tax, (c) in terms of a reduction in poll tax, for the average poll tax payment and (d) in terms of a one-off cash payment to each pensioner.

Miss Widdecombe: Contracting out of the state earnings-related pensions scheme by virtue of an approved occupational pension scheme was introduced by the Social Security Pensions Act 1975. The Government Actuary's report on the Social Security Benefits Up-rating Order 1990 and the Social Security (Contributions) (Re-rating) Order 1990 (Cm. 948) showed that in 1990-91 the total contribution reductions attributable to both occupational and personal pensions would be about £7·6 billion of which about £2 billion would be in respect of rebates and incentives for personal pensions. It is not appropriate to express these reductions in other ways because they relate directly to benefits that would otherwise be a charge upon the national insurance fund, and the fund in turn depends upon the levels of national insurance contributions and the benefit expenditure which it is required to meet.

Pension Funds

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to enlarge the power of pension fund trustees.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received over the operation of company pension funds.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department receives representations from time to time on various aspects of company pension funds.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to secure the financial interest of company pension fund beneficiaries.

Miss Widdecombe: The Social Security Act 1990 introduced a number of measures to help members of occupational pension schemes. Members will have a statutory right to annual increases for pension rights built up in the future. Schemes will have to use any surpluses to give increases up to a required level. On the insolvency of an employer, an independent trustee must be appointed to look after members' interests on the winding up of a scheme. From 1 January 1991 early leavers will get the whole of their preserved pension revalued.

In addition, a pensions ombudsman will be able to assist individuals who have problems with their occupational or personal pension scheme.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what legal or regulatory frameworks exist to control the relationship of a company pension fund to its parent company.

Miss Widdecombe: Most occupational pension schemes are set up voluntarily by employers as irrevocable trusts and are therefore subject to trust law. In addition, schemes are required to satisfy the statutory requirements laid down by the Social Security Acts and the requirements for obtaining tax approval under the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1958.

Research

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) in cash terms and (b) deflated according to an appropriate index of higher education pay and prices the spending on social security research in each year from 1979 to the most recent year which his Department has funded in universities, polytechnics and other related institutions.

Miss Widdecombe: Total spending on social security research in 1989-90 (the latest year for which information is available) was £937,000. Available information for previous years is published in the Cabinet Office annual review of research and development, a copy of which is in the Library.

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: Departmental purchasing information systems do not differentiate between acquiring and commissioning goods and services. In 1987, a departmental purchasing supply directorate was established by the Department of Health and Social Security. Before that date purchasing information in the Department of Health and Social Security was not consolidated and information for the financing year 1985-86 is not readily available. Information on purchasing expenditure for the financial years 1986-87 to 1988-89 is given in the table. The figures for the years 1986-87 to 1988-89 cover the Department of Health as well as the Department of Social Security. This information is set out in the annual reports of the Central Unit on Purchasing, copies of which are in the Library.

[1] Estimate.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many deaf-blind people have (a) claimed mobility allowance and (b) been awarded mobility allowance since April.

Mr. Scott: From 11 April 1990 to 30 November 1990, 747 mobility allowance claims have been made under the deaf-blind provisions. Of these, 347 have been awarded mobility allowance, 278 have been refused and 122 claims are currently being processed.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Miss Widdecombe: For information from 1985-86 to 1988-89, I refer the hon. Member to replies given to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 19 December 1986 at columns 793-94, on 14 January 1988 at column 402 and on 13 March 1989 at column 30.

Expenditure by the Department in 1989-90 is:

	£ million
Press	1·486
Television and radio	5·313
Other (including leaflets and videos)[1]	8·843
Sound cassettes	£12,000

[1] Separate information about expenditure on videos is not available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Enzootic Bovine Leukosis

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken to ensure that cattle with enzootic bovine leukosis are not imported into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: Imported cattle must be accompanied by a health certificate, signed by an official veterinarian of the Government of the exporting country, confirming among other things that the animals originate from holdings which have been free of enzootic bovine leukosis (EBL) for up to three years, and that the animals have been subjected to the required testing for EBL, with negative results, before export.

From 1 July 1991, rules governing trade between member states of the European Community will require that cattle for breeding and production must come only from herds which are officially recognised as EBL free.

Farmed Salmon

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has any evidence that residues of dichlorvos are found in the flesh of farmed salmon.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 22 November to the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos), Official Report, column 215.

Cling Film

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to assure himself that the additives used in the manufacturing of cling film have been adequately tested and have been approved for use with all foodstuffs, including fatty foodstuffs; what requirements there are for product labelling with this information; and what assessment he has made of the risk to public health from this product.

Mr. Maclean: The Food Advisory Committee and the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment have recently advised that there is no evidence to suggest that the use of additives in cling films has caused harm to human health, and these films remain suitable for most food uses. However, for some additives the toxicological data are not yet complete and as a matter of prudence the committees have advised that cling films should not be used in certain applications, such as in contact with high fat foods.

Manufacturers are recommended to label packs in accordance with the advice given in the food safety directorate's information bulletin, special edition, a copy of which is in the Library.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Mr. Curry: Expenditure by this Department in each of the last five years on advertising in the press, radio and television and other promotion is as follows:

	Advertising in the press (£)	Advertising on television and radio (£)	Other promotional material (£)
1985-86	29,000	Nil	656,000
1986-87	54,000	Nil	825,000
1987-88	12,000	Nil	693,000
1988-89	380,000	Nil	1,004,000
1989-90	116,000	Nil	2,385,000

The figures for other promotional material include videos produced as part of overall public information campaigns. Separate figures for production of these and sound cassettes could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the countries which are refusing to import British milk due to concerns over BSE; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The only countries currently restricting imports of milk and milk products because of concerns about BSE are China, Egypt, Jordan, Syria, Tunisia, Turkey and the USSR.

All the scientific evidence is that milk and milk products are quite safe to consume in any form. This view has been endorsed by the European Community's scientific experts and those of the Office Internationale des Epizooties (OIE). A recent OIE report on BSE recommends that exports of milk and milk products from the United Kingdom should not be restricted for either animal or public health reasons. We will continue to press countries which have imposed restrictions to lift them.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pesticide active ingredients applications he has (a) received, (b) approved and (c) rejected to date in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is set out in the table in respect of applications for agricultural pesticides submitted to this Ministry for approval by the six Departments responsible. Applications for which the Health and Safety Executive is primarily responsible—non-agricultural pesticides—are not included.

	Number
Received	7
Approved (fully/provisonally)	6
Approved for experimental use only	1
Rejected/Withdrawn	5

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the active pesticide ingredients which have been reviewed since March 1989; whether they were subject to a full or partial review; whether the active ingredients were withdrawn fully or partially; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The following agricultural pesticides have been reviewed by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides since March 1989. (F = Fully, P = Partially).

Captafol	(F) Phased revocation (final use ended 31 October 1990)
Daminozide	(P) No change
Dimethoate	(P) Approvals amended
Fenbutatin oxide	(P) No change
Fentin acetate	(P) Approvals amended
Fentin hydroxide	(P) Approvals amended
Iprodione	(P) Approvals amended
Alachlor	(F) Approvals amended
EBDC's	(P) Approvals amended
2-Aminobutane	(P) Approvals amended

At present 43 agricultural pesticides are undergoing review, of which four are partial reviews.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) active ingredients and (b) pesticide products are currently approved for use in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: The approximate number of pesticides currently approved for use is as follows:

	Agricultural	Non-agricultural
Active ingredients	360	90
Products	3,400	1,100

Full details are given in Her Majesty's Stationery Office publication "Pesticides 1990", a copy of which has been lodged in the Library.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the present levels of environmentally sensitive area payments; if he has any plans to revise them; and if he will also express them at 1986 prices.

Mr. Curry: The present level of ESA payments is shown in the table.

ESA		£/HA
Broads	Tier 1	125
	Tier 2	200
Breckland	Tier 1	100
	Tier 2	125
	Tier 3:
	UWS	300
	CH	100
North Peak	Tier 1	10
	Tier 2	20
Pennine Dales		100
Shropshire Borders	Tier 1	30
	Tier 2	80
Somerset Levels and Moors	Tier 1	82
	Tier 2	120
South Downs	Tier 1	35
	Tier 2	160
Suffolk River Valleys	Tier 1	70
	Tier 2	180
	Tier 3	200
Test Valley		80
West Penwith		60

It was made clear at the outset that it would not be appropriate for these payments to be index-linked, but that they would be reviewed after three years. The review carried out last year for those ESAs designated in 1987 concluded that the payments were still at broadly the right levels. I am now reviewing payments in ESAs designated in 1988, and I will be conducting a full-scale review of the scheme next year to determine the way forward.

Monetary Compensatory Amounts

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the reasons which lay behind the introduction of monetary compensatory amounts.

Mr. Curry: Monetary compensatory amounts were introduced in 1969 when it was agreed that changes in exchange rates should not immediately apply to the exchange rates used to convert common agricultural support prices into national currencies; they were intended to enable trade between member states to continue at common price levels and so prevent the distortions of trade that use of differing exchange rates would have encouraged.

Flooding, River Severn

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the number of places along the River Severn where its banks have burst in each of the last 10 years and the number of dwellings, farms and small holdings that have been damaged as a result.

Mr. Curry: There has been no breaching of the banks of the River Severn over the last 10 years. All the flooding which has occurred over this period has been caused by banks being over-topped, consistent with the design which allows over-topping so that river levels can be kept below the point where serious urban flooding of large towns might occur.

No precise data are available on the number of properties flooded over the last 10 years in the lower and upper Severn areas. In the tidal reach downstream of Gloucester, about 100 domestic properties and two caravan sites in this area have been flooded by high tides, some on more than one occasion. The incidence of tidal flooding along these banks will be reduced as the River Severn tidal defence scheme progresses.

The extensive floods of last winter, which were of a magnitude that might occur once in 20 years, caused damage to about 350 properties in the upper and lower Severn flood plain. About 60 of these were commercial properties and a further six were farm houses. During this event, a total of 75 sq km of agricultural land was inundated by flood water. Most of the lower Severn over-topped its banks on both sides between Worcester and Gloucester and in the upper Severn upstream of Worcester over-topping occurred in approximately six places.

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Curry: Departmental purchasing information systems do not differentiate between acquiring and commissioning goods and services. However, information on departmental purchasing expenditure from 1986-87 is set out in the annual reports of the Central Unit on Purchasing, copies of which are available in the Library.

Tobacco

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those countries to which high-tar EC tobacco is exported; and what quantities are involved.

Mr. Curry: EC published export statistics for tobacco are not broken down by tar content. Exports of EC tobacco in 1989 were 185,067 tonnes, some 13 per cent. of world exports of unmanufactured tobacco. Eurostat statistics giving countries of destination and quantities are available in the Library of the House.

Ewe Premium

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the payments of the second instalment of the ewe premium have been made; and by what date these payments should be completed.

Mr. Curry: About 95 per cent. of all first and second instalments due to producers in England under the 1990 sheep annual premium scheme have now been paid. The outstanding claims will be passed for payment as soon as the necessary checks have been completed.

Suckler Cow Premium

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of this year's suckler cow premium payments have been made; and by what date these payments should be completed.

Mr. Curry: As at 10 December 10,135 payable orders had been issued to producers in England in respect of claims made under the 1990-91 suckler cow premium scheme. The scheme remains open to applications until 31 January 1991. It is not, therefore, possible to say what proportion of the eventual total this figure represents.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

4. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of unemployed in December 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Howard: The number of people unemployed in the United Kingdom on the seasonally adjusted, consistent, basis was 1,055,000 in December 1979 and 1,636,100 in December 1989.

Tourism (Northumberland)

16. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will meet the Northumbria tourist board to discuss the development of tourism in Northumberland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My noble Friend Viscount Ullswater, who has responsibility for tourism matters within the Department of Employment, met officers and members of the Northumbria tourist board yesterday. At that meeting he discussed with the board its strategy for the development of tourism in the region, and its plans for its future role.

Disabled People

19. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many responses he has received to his White Paper on employment and disability.

Mr. Jackson: By 30 November my Department had received 80 replies to the consultative document, "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities".

28. Mr. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's policy towards the maintenance of the quota system for the employment of people with disabilities.

Mr. Jackson: This Department operates the quota system in line with its legal responsibilities. It seeks to underpin the legal requirements on employers by assisting them through the disablement advisory service to improve the effectiveness of employers' recruitment, retention and development policies for people with disabilities. In the consultative document "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities" we have asked for comments on the merits and demerits of the quota system.

Labour Statistics, Lambeth

20. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of insured workers in Lambeth SW2 and SW9 postal districts is unemployed.

Mr. Jackson: There are no official unemployment percentages calculated for postal districts. However, in October 1990 the numbers of unemployed claimants, not seasonally adjusted, in Lambeth SW2 and SW9 were 2,877 and 2,942 respectively.

Offshore Installations (Safety)

21. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with the United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association and relevant trade unions on the transfer of the safety responsibility of the Department of Energy to the Health and Safety Executive following the publication of the Cullen report into the Piper Alpha disaster.

Mr. Howard: Responsibility for offshore safety remains with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy until arrangements for an efficient transfer are completed. He has indicated that he is willing to have discussions with all those with something to contribute to improving North sea safety. I will adopt a similar approach. In addition, the structure and well-established procedures of the Health and Safety Commission will ensure that all relevant interests are consulted.

Tourism

22. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much overseas visitors to the United Kingdom spend per year.

Mr. Forth: During 1989, the last full year for which information is available, overseas visitors to the United Kingdom spent £6,945 million.

COSHH Regulations

23. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to improve the working of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations.

Mr. Forth: The regulations have been in force for only just over 12 months are there are no reasons for considering any changes to the substance of the regulations. The Health and Safety Executive is monitoring their implementation and is continuing its substantial efforts to explain and enforce the regulations.

Stallite Batteries, Barnsley

24. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action the Health and Safety Executive intends to take over the recent ombudsman's report on Stallite Batteries, Barnsley.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) field organisation has been recently substantially changed as the result of internal efficiency reviews. This change, coupled with improvements to the administration of medical surveillance procedures introduced by HSE following its own internal investigation, have been acknowledged by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, in his report published on 31 October, as a satisfactory outcome to the complaint raised.

Training and Enterprise Councils

25. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what advice he gives to training and enterprise councils that are having difficulty meeting national standards of training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I have had no representations from training and enterprise councils (TECs) that they are having difficulty meeting national standards of training. My Department is ready to offer advice to TECs on the national standards set out by industry.

EC Labour Statistics

26. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the countries in the European Community with a lower rate of unemployment than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Howard: Using the latest available internationally comparable figures, Portugal and Luxembourg have lower rates of unemployment than the United Kingdom. No figures are available for the unified Germany.

Wages (Underpayment)

27. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of prosecutions for the illegal underpayment of wages in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: In 1989, there were nine prosecutions under the Wages Act 1986 for the illegal underpayment of wages.

Special Needs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the report, "Disability Employment and Training, Meeting a Demographic Challenge of the Nineties", produced jointly by SKILL and ILEA.

Mr. Jackson: My Department's library already has a copy of the report.

European Information Centres

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what financial support his Department currently provides for the European information centres in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth: The European information centre network is a European Commission initiative to which the United Kingdom contributes 18·7 per cent. of the budget. In addition, my Department has a small budget for co-ordinating bi-annual meetings of the United Kingdom centres and will also be contributing to the costs of a feasibility study for a national European information centre advertising campaign. My Department also financially supports one of the four pilot centres which is based with the small firms service in London.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what financial or other support his Department is planning in the future for United Kingdom European information centres.

Mr. Forth: My Department will continue to support the European information centres in the United Kingdom as outlined in my previous answer.

Action Credit

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the rate of unemployment and long-term unemployment defined as (a) continuously unemployed for a period of six months or more and (b) continuously unemployed for 12 months or more in the three areas chosen for the Training Agency's action credit pilot as pertaining in August 1989.

Mr. Jackson: The following information is available in the Library. Unemployment rates are not available for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas. Figures are given for the county of Avon and for the travel-to-work areas most closely approximating to the two other action credit pilot areas as at August 1989. The table shows the total numbers of unemployed claimants and the rate of unemployment and the number who have been unemployed for six months or more and 12 months or more for each area in October 1990, the latest available date. All figures are on the unadjusted basis.

	Total Unemployment	Rate	6 months or more	12 months or more
Avon County	23,421	4·7	10,255	6,182
Sunderland TTWA	19,130	10·4	9,700	6,282
Medway and Maidstone TTWA	10,915	4·4	4,032	2,078

Health and Safety

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what factors he lays down as essential for the attainment of improved health and safety at work.

Mr. Forth: Improving standards of health and safety at work requires the commitment of everyone concerned—employers, employees, the self-employed and so on—to comply with their duties under health and safety law. This demands a high degree of safety awareness at all levels, but especially among top management, and an effective management structure to ensure that health and safety risks are identified and appropriate measures taken to deal with those risks. There is no better introduction to the principles of health and safety than the executive's booklet "Essentials of Health and Safety at Work", revised earlier this year, and of which up to October 1990, 85,000 copies had been sold.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which Ministers have been responsible for health and safety at work since May 1979; and for how long each exercised the responsibility.

Mr. Jackson: The following Secretaries of State have had overall responsibility for health and safety at work within the Department:

	Dates
Secretary of State	From	To
The Rt. Hon. James Prior	9 May 1979	14 September 1981
The Rt. Hon. Norman Tebbit	14 September 1981	17 October 1983
The Rt. Hon. Tom King	17 October 1983	2 September 1985
The Rt. Hon. Lord Young of Graffam	2 September 1985	12 June 1987
The Rt. Hon. Norman Fowler	15 June 1987	3 January 1990
The Rt. Hon. Michael Howard	4 January 1990	Present

In addition, Ministers who have had specific responsibility are listed in the table:

	Dates
Minister	From	To
Patrick Mayhew	9 May 1979	5 January 1981
David Waddington	6 January 1981	7 January 1983
John Gummer	10 January 1983	10 September 1984
Peter Bottomley	11 September 1984	23 January 1986
David Trippier	24 January 1986	12 June 1987
Patrick Nicholls	15 June 1987	23 July 1989
Eric Forth	24 July 1989	Present

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of applications in industrial tribunals were first heard within 12, 16, 20 and 26 weeks, respectively, of the receipt of the application during the month of October.

Mr. Forth: The percentage of cases heard during October within 12, 16, 20 and 26 weeks respectively of the receipt of application were as follows:

Weeks	England and Wales	Scotland
12	35	49
16	59	70
20	75	83
26	89	88

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many members of the Health and Safety Executive staff are directly contributing to CEN technical committees and the related working groups;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the adequacy of the travel expenses being made available to allow the inspectors involved with CEN technical committees and related working groups to attend all meetings where standards are developed and set (a) in the current year and (b) in 1991-92; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what sums have been made available by the Health and Safety Executive, in providing expenses for inspectors to travel in Europe to attend CEN standard-setting meetings;

(4) on what occasions, and in respect of which CEN committees or working groups, an inspector has been prohibited from attending a CEN meeting because expenses money is not available;

(5) which Health and Safety Executive national interest groups are involved with CEN technical committees and related working groups;

(6) what steps are taken to ensure that sufficient resources are made available so that Health and Safety Executive staff may attend all relevant CEN technical committees and relevant working groups;

(7) if he will list all the CEN technical committees and working groups which have been assessed as needing the involvement of the Health and Safety Executive;

(8) if he will make a statement on the priority given to the work of CEN in respect of ensuring good standards of machinery guarding, to protect workers from injury.

Mr. Forth: In the last few years the Health and Safety Executive has made a large contribution to the work of CEN and the other European bodies making standards important to health and safety at work. This it does by participation in British Standards Institute committees shadowing work in CEN and as part of the United Kingdom delegation to CEN from BSI. A few examples of areas covered include simple pressure vessels, personal protective equipment and in particular machinery safety, where HSE is very conscious of the need to maintain high levels of protection.

The importance HSE attaches to standards work is reflected in the growth in resources it has devoted to it, which has risen from around 27 staff years in 1988-89 to an estimated 50 staff years in 1990-91. Most of this increase is accounted for by the rapid growth in standards making in Europe, particularly by CEN.

Although standards are a significant element in the safety system they are not the only part nor necessarily the most important. When it became apparent that the current rate of growth in standards making in Europe in connection with the single market would lead to spending of 68 staff years in 1991-92, the HSE concluded that such a level could not be sustained without unacceptable damage to its other priorities for safety and health. The Health and Safety Commission subsequently decided that the resources committed to standards work should be held at around the present level of 58 staff years for 1991-92, and its reasons were published in its most recent plan of work, for 1990-91, and beyond.

The executive does not allocate a specific sum to CEN work nor identify costs in this way but exercises firm control over all time, travel and subsistence costs. The task of making standards, especially those needed for the single market is, of course, primarily one for industry and the Government have long been encouraging United Kingdom industry to increase its involvement. Controlling this growth in standards work means that individual members of the HSE will not be able to attend certain CEN meetings. I have received representations on this point, but it is absolutely right that the executive should set its own priorities for staff work. The HSE staff engaged in this work are people with scarce specialist skills which are in great demand to support the executive's general role. Conflicting demands on such resources always mean that priorities must be allocated: sometimes very worth while relevant activities have to take their place behind other more important tasks. Further, it is often the case that an acceptable alternative to attendance at CEN committees is for the executive to play an active role in the relevant BSI technical committees.

At present 50 individual staff are members of CEN/CENELEC technical committees and related working groups: there are many other staff taking an active part in BSI shadow committees, examining papers and providing support work. A list of the national interest groups involved with this CEN work is at table 1 and the CEN committees with which HSE is involved are at table 2.

TECs, Cheshire

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress he has made in setting up training and enterprise councils in Cheshire.

Mr. Jackson: Progress in setting up training and enterprise councils has been excellent. There are three TECs covering different parts of Cheshire. South and East Cheshire TEC has been fully operational since April 1990. The TEC covering Chester, Ellesmere Port and the Wirral is in development and due to become operational in April 1991, as is the TEC covering north and mid-Cheshire (NorMidTEC).

Strikes

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of strikes in August.

Mr. Forth: It is provisionally estimated that there were 54.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Mr. Jackson: The amount spent in each of the last five years by my Department is as follows:

	Press advertising £ million	Television and radio advertising £ million	Other advertising and promotion £ million
1985-86	n/a	n/a	n/a
1986-87	9·7	25·4	16·2
1987-88	7·5	20·9	14·4
1988-89	7·7	14·8	13·7
1989-90	7·8	8·1	14·2

Figures for press, television and radio and other advertising and promotion are not available separately for 1985-86.

Figures for the amount spent on promotional videos and sound cassettes are included in the "other advertising and promotion category" and could be separated out only at disproportionate cost.

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Forth: Departmental purchasing information systems do not differentiate between acquiring and commissioning goods and services. However, information on departmental purchasing expenditure from 1986-87 is set out in the annual reports of the Central Unit on Purchasing, copies of which are available in the Library.

Nottingham

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he next expects to make an official visit to Nottingham to discuss the operation of his Department's programmes in the city.

Mr. Jackson: At present, neither my right hon. and learned Friend nor I have any plans to visit Nottingham. The Department operates a full range of employment, enterprise and training measures in Nottingham.

Deaf People (Interpreters)

Mr. Oakes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide funding for an interpreter service for the deaf within the Employment Service.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 10 December 1990]: The Employment Service has recently published a summary paper on an evaluation of the special schemes which are designed to help remove specific barriers to work resulting from disabilities, together with a letter seeking comments. Any views on the funding of an interpreter service for deaf people in response to these consultations will be considered along with all other comments received.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 12 December 1990

ENERGY

Spent Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consideration he has given to the application of nuclear safeguards to spent nuclear fuel designated for direct disposal.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom applies the requirements of the international safeguards authorities to all civil spent nuclear fuel.

Electricity Privatisations

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the breakdown of individual to institutional shareholders in the 12 regional electricity companies (a) on first dealings day and (b) one year hence.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Approximately 54·6 per cent. of the shares in each company have been made available to the general public and to employees and pensioners. The balance has been sold to United Kingdom and overseas institutions. Figures for a year hence are obviously not available.

TRANSPORT

Pelican Crossing, Kibworth

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to commence work on the A6 trunk road pelican crossing between Kibworth Harcourt and Kibworth Beauchamp in Leicestershire before Christmas.

Mr. Chope: I regret that it will not be possible for work to begin before spring 1991. But the detailed design is almost complete.

School Buses

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what examination his Department has made of the American example of stopping traffic when children are alighting from school buses; and whether he has any plans to introduce such a system in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chope: The Department has no wish to emulate the position in the United States of America where in spite of special regulations some 40 children are killed and 800 injured each year in school bus loading zones.

We do, however, intend to require school buses to display special signs and regulations will be made as soon as possible.

Belfast-Gatwick Air Route

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will seek to increase competition and service to customers on the Belfast-Gatwick air route; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The pattern of services on individual routes is a matter for the commercial judgment of airlines, which may apply to the Civil Aviation Authority at any time for a licence in accordance with statutory procedures.

South Manchester Study

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make available to the public the south Manchester study which he commissioned in 1988.

Mr. Chope: No. The study was a background paper and not prepared for publication.

MFV Antares

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline the structure and status of the proposed inquiry into the recent loss of the MFV Antares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The inquiry into the loss of MFV Antares, which is now well advanced, began on 23 November and was given the status of an inspector's inquiry, under the Merchant Shipping (Accident Investigation) Regulations, on 26 November. The inspectors appointed have extensive powers under the Merchant Shipping Acts, including the power to call witnesses before them, require witnesses to answer their questions and produce documents, and to carry out any examination of ships or equipment they deem necessary.

The inspectors will report to the chief inspector of marine accidents who will in turn report to the Secretary of State. The chief inspector's report will include the inspectors' findings and whatever recommendations he considers will help to avoid a similar accident in the future. The regulations require the report to be published unless the Secretary of State orders a formal investigation or there is good reason not to publish.

In addition, a Royal Navy inquiry is taking place; and there will be a fatal accident inquiry before the sheriff, in preparation for which the Strathclyde police is carrying out an investigation. All three groups of investigators—Royal Navy, police and inspectors—are fully co-operating with each other, but they will each arrive at their conclusions and make their respective reports independently.

Specialist Advisers

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to increase the number of specialist advisers to his Department concerned with environmental and global warming issues.

Mr. McLoughlin: No.

M23 (Signals)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to announce the appointment of a consulting engineer to report on the design of traffic signals at junction 10 on the M23.

Mr. Chope: Tenders have been invited for the appointment of a consulting engineer to report on the traffic signals at junction 10 of the M23. The tender period closes on 21 December and the appointment will be made in the new year.

Speedlink Freight Service

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has received from the chairman of British Rail about the future of the Speedlink freight service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail has today announced its plans following its consultations with Speedlink customers. I have arranged for a copy of the announcement to be placed in the Library of the House.

South Yorkshire Supertram

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement about the funding of the South Yorkshire Supertram project.

Mr. Freeman: The South Yorkshire passenger transport authority has now provided the assurances about the project to which I referred in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter) on 28 November, column 406. I have accordingly informed the authority that grant under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968 together with credit approvals will be provided to enable it to implement the scheme.

Safety Belts

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward proposals to change the law to make safety belts compulsory in minibuses used for the transport of children.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 11 December 1990]: Minibuses first used on or after 1 October 1988 are already required to have seat belts fitted to all front seats. We have been pressing for agreement in the European Community to enable us to require the fitting of seat belts in all seats in minibuses. As a result, the European Commission is now committed to bringing forward proposals for consideration by the Community by the end of 1991.

HOME DEPARTMENT

International Friendship Club

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has had any representations about services offered by the International Friendship Club, of Regents park, Southampton, in the context of immigration by Filipino citizens; and whether he has any proposals to curb efforts by such agencies to obtain fees from United Kingdom citizens for these services.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government receive representations from time to time about the activities of international marriage agencies but have received no specific representation about International Friendship Club. Such agencies neither have nor confer any special status: they and overseas national using their services have at all times to observe the requirement of the immigration rules. There are no present plans for legislation.

Electoral Registers

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many expatriates have now had a vote registered in the United Kingdom under the 1989 Act; and if he will give a breakdown of the countries where they are now resident, following the publication of new draft electoral registers for 1991-92.

Mrs. Rumbold: Lists of overseas electors were published by individual electoral registration officers on 28 November. We shall make the figures known to the House in due course. A breakdown of the number of overseas electors by country of residence could be published only at disproportionate cost.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many firearm certificates were currently valid in each police authority area of England, Scotland and Wales for 1988, 1989, and 1990, respectively;

(2) how many shotgun certificates were currently valid in each police authority area in England, Scotland and Wales for 1988, 1989 and 1990, respectively.

Mr. John Patten: The number of firearm and shotgun certificates on issue on 31 December of both 1988 and 1989 is shown for each police authority in England and Wales in tables 2 and 4 of Home Office statistical bulletins 18/89 and 26/90. A copy of these bulletins is in the Library.

Figures for 1990 are not yet available. I am informed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland that the number of firearm and shotgun certificates on issue on 31 December of both 1988 and 1989 was as follows:

Number of firearm and shotgun certificates in Scottish police force areas 1988 and 1989

	Number of certificates
	1988		1989
Police force area	Firearm	Shotgun	Firearm	Shotgun
Central Scotland	1,380	4,837	1,364	4,626
Dumfries and Galloway	3,033	6,702	2,637	6,496
Fife	1,801	6,307	1,754	6,152
Grampian	6,183	14,221	6,144	14,132
Lothian and Borders	4,575	12,494	4,418	12,256
Northern	9,928	13,696	8,037	13,391
Strathclyde	6,642	21,116	5,513	20,167
Tayside	4,799	10,120	3,673	9,829
Total in Scotland	38,341	89,493	33,540	87,049

Note: Figures are at 31 December each year.

Road Fund Licence Discs

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Hampshire on the outcome of the latest survey carried out in the Southampton area on display of road fund licence discs by motorists.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable that Hampshire constabulary, in conjunction with the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, conducted a vehicle excise campaign in Hampshire and the Isle of Wight between 1 and 30 November. Information about the outcome of the campaign is not yet available because offence reports are still being processed.

Game Licences

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many game licences were issued in the 1989-90 season; and what were the net revenues to his Department from the issue of such licences.

Mrs. Rumbold: 47,432 game licences were issued in Great Britain in the financial year 1989-90 and £245,812 was raised in revenue. The costs of issuing game licences are borne by the Home Office and came to a total of £172,406, but the revenue passes to local authorities.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on the meeting of the Council of Ministers on 27 November in relation to the proposal for a directive on data protection from the European Commission.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that this meeting was cancelled and that the draft directive is not on the agenda for the Council's meeting later this month.

Convicted Murderers

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted murderers have committed further murders after being released from a prison sentence for that offence; and how many people have been murdered by such ex-prisoners since 1965.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the number of persons convicted of murder who had previous murder convictions is published annually in Criminal Statistics, England and Wales—table 4.10 of the latest issue, for 1989, Cm. 1322—copies of which are available in the Library.

During the period from 1946 to 1989, 10 persons in England and Wales were convicted of a second murder after previously being convicted of murder and being released on life licence. In addition, one person was convicted of murder in England and Wales, released, and was then convicted of a second murder in Scotland and one person was convicted of murder in England and Wales, released, and was then convicted of a murder in prison in Northern Ireland.

Since the abolition of the death penalty in 1965, there have been eight persons in England and Wales who have been murdered by persons previously convicted of murder. Of those previous murder convictions, four were committed before abolition of the death penalty; only one of the others might have attracted the death penalty under the terms of the Homicide Act 1957. In addition, one person was murdered in Scotland by a person who had previously been convicted of murder in England and Wales, and one person was murdered in Northern Ireland by a person who had previously been convicted of murder in England and Wales.

Racism

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received a copy of the European Parliament's report on "Xenophobia and Racism"; and what response he intends to make.

Mrs. Rumbold: The report of the European Parliament's committee of inquiry into racism and xenophobia was received in September and its recommendations are being studied.

Asylum

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applicants for asylum in the United Kingdom have been held in detention for longer than three months in (a) 1989 and (b) 1990;

(2) how many people seeking asylum in the United Kingdom have been detained in Her Majesty's prisons for more than seven days since (a) 1 January 1989 and (b) 1 June 1990;

(3) how many people by nationality were held in detention on the first day in each month in 1990 pending their seeking asylum.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. On 7 December, 51 persons who had claimed asylum had been detained under Immigration Act powers for three months or more.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are currently employed in the asylum and special cases division of the immigration and nationality department; how many of these are processing applications for asylum; and what were the comparable figures in each of the preceding five years.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the staff complement at the Home Office refugee unit in each year since 1980.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 11 December 1990]: Figures are not available for years before 1984. In subsequent years the number of staff in post or in training dealing with asylum matters was as follows:

	Numbers
1 April 1984	39
1 October 1985	48
1 October 1986	47
1 October 1987	52
1 October 1988	57
1 October 1989	67
6 December 1990	100

The figures for 1990 include three senior managers, two personal secretaries, and three members of the research unit, none of whom is directly engaged in processing applications; a similar number of staff were engaged in these duties in previous years. The asylum and special cases division, which was established as a separate division on 12 November 1990, is also responsible for the issue of Home Office travel documents and re-entry visas on which 17·6 staff are employed, in addition to those dealing with asylum matters.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specialist training relating to asylum issues is given, upon appointment, to officials in the public inquiry office of the immigration and nationality department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Staff in the public inquiry office receive training which lasts about 11 weeks. The course covers immigration law and practice, interviewing and communication skills and customer care. No specialist training on asylum policy is given as the staff in the public inquiry office do not take decisions in such cases. Their role in asylum cases is confined to receiving applications and interviewing applicants to obtain details of their claim on behalf of the asylum and special cases division who provide guidance on specific geographical areas as necessary.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish all written instructions for officials dealing with asylum applications, including immigration officers and officials in the public inquiry office and refugee unit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. It is not the usual practice to publish such internal management instructions.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether written reasons of refusal of asylum are given, at the time of refusal, to those seeking asylum in the United Kingdom who are refused asylum but granted exceptional leave to remain.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Written reasons are given only when the applicant is to be removed to the country in which he claims to fear persecution.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to ensure that the procedures used by his Department for dealing with applications for asylum in the United Kingdom comply with internationally recognised standards for the protection of refugees and asylum seekers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I am satisfied that asylum procedures in my Department meet the United Kingdom's obligations under the 1951 United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees.

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to recover sums due by airlines under the Immigration (Carriers' Liabilities) Act 1987; how much has been received to date; how much is outstanding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of £22·792 million had been incurred by carriers—that is, airlines and sea operators —to 13 November 1990. Of this sum, £8·135 million had been paid and £1·142 million waived on the basis of representations in individual cases, leaving £13·515 million outstanding.

Vigorous action is being taken to enforce payment of outstanding liabilities. In July, writs were issued against four airlines; three have since settled out of court. In October and November final demand letters were sent to all carriers with outstanding debts. These have produced a mixture of payments, promises of payment and requests for urgent meetings. Early meetings are being arranged, where requested, to discuss the scope for resolution without recourse to the courts. But the Treasury Solicitor will be instructed to institute civil recovery proceedings where payment or satisfactory proposals for payment are not forthcoming promptly.

Refugee Unit

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specialist training is given, upon appointment, to officials in the Home Office refugee unit; what follow-up training is given to such officials; and if he intends to take steps to improve such training.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Officials in the asylum and special cases division of the Home Office specialise in geographical areas and they are trained by working under close supervision on individual cases; additional training on general determination matters is being developed with UNHCR; and seminars are held on particular geographical areas with outside academics.

Bradford Magistrates Court

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange for facilities at Bradford magistrates court to be extended to include a creche, interpreters, and refreshments.

Mr. John Patten: It is for the Bradford magistrates courts committee, in consultation with its paying authority, to decide whether to pursue the provision of creche facilities. I understand that arrangements for interpretation are already in place, and that there is a restaurant at the court house which provides refreshments thoughout the day.

Prisoners (Suicide)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he plans (i) to strengthen the efforts made by the prison service to prevent suicides by inmates and (ii) to ensure that the families of inmates who die in custody receive the support which they require following the death.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I regard suicide and self-injury in prison as an extremely serious problem. I have asked the Director General of the Prison Service to give very high priority to it. Prison staff already make very considerable efforts to identify and care for inmates at risk, but I want to ensure that the necessary lessons are learned from past tragedies and consistently applied in future. The recent reorganisation of the prison service has presented the opportunity to reinforce existing guidance and secure more effective implementation of the prevention strategy set out in circular instruction 20/1989. Under a new addendum to CI 20/1989, area managers and governors are being required to institute more regular and thorough reviews of the measures being taken at their establishments. The suicide prevention management group within the establishment will be mainly responsible for such reviews: a thorough checklist of suicide prevention measures has been issued to ensure that all aspects of this complex and distressing problem are properly tackled.

In addition, governors are being given fresh guidance in circular instruction 52/1990 on support for bereaved families. Wherever practicable, visits will be made to close relatives of deceased inmates to offer sympathy, to respond to their questions and concerns and to pass on information, as appropriate, about specialised counselling and support services in the community.

I am conscious, too, of the traumatic effects which suicides can have on prison staff, particularly those who had responsibilities for the care and supervision of the inmate concerned. CI 52/1990 also stresses the need for support to be given to any member of staff who may need it.

The addendum to CI 20/1989, together with CI 52/1990, will be issued tomorrow, 13 December, under cover of a letter to managers in the prison service from the Director of Inmate Administration and the Director of Prison Medical Services. Copies of all these documents are being placed in the Library.

We shall be reviewing our suicide prevention policies in the light of the report on this subject by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons which will be published very shortly.

WALES

Cardiac Surgery

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many open heart operations have been undertaken this year at the University hospital of Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I understand from South Glamorgan health authority that 544 open heart operations were undertaken at the University hospital of Wales between 1 January and 30 November this year.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide the capital allocation his Department is making in the current financial year to enable South Glamorgan health authority to reach its target of open heart operations to be performed yearly at the University hospital of Wales as a regional service.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: As part of the Department's continuing commitment to increasing the number of open heart operations per year capable of being achieved by the University hospital of Wales, capital allocations of approximately £1·2 million are being made available to South Glamorgan health authority in the current financial year for adult cardiac services and £1·5 million for paediatric cardiac services.

Work in the course of the current financial year to enhance cardiac service facilities at the University hospital of Wales has included upgraded catheter laboratories, additional intensive care facilities and a new paediatric cardiac unit at a cost to central funds of some £4 million. Our officials are currently discussing with South Glamorgan DHA further developments to ensure that targets are reached.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost to Clwyd health authority and South Glamorgan health authority of referring patients for open heart surgery outside Wales between 1 April and 31 October this year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I understand from Clwyd health authority that the cost of referrals between 1 April and 31 October this year was approximately £160,000 and from South Glamorgan health authority that the costs were in the region of £260,000.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the target date by which 120 open heart operations will be undertaken on children at the University hospital of Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Building work on the paediatric cardiac unit at the University hospital of Wales having been completed, the unit is being commissioned to come into service during 1991. The date by which capacity will be approached will depend upon the nature and timing of referrals.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the organisations in Wales which have received funding to help the development of local programmes within Welsh counties to combat alcohol misuse; and if he will give the amount given to each organisation for 1990-91 and the figure projected for each organisation for the 1991-92 financial year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No allocations have yet been made. Allocations will be made early in the new year.

Epilepsy

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to provide financial support to the Wales Epilepsy Association to enable it to develop services of advice, guidance and support network for epileptics and their families throughout Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Health and social services authorities are responsible for assessing the needs of their local populations and for securing such services as they feel are appropriate to meet them.

The Wales Epilepsy Association has submitted an application for financial assistance in support of headquarters and project development costs under section 64 of the Health and Public Services Act 1968. I am shortly to see a delegation from the association, led by the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) to discuss their work. A decision on the application for section 64 funding will be made as soon as possible in the light of our consideration of all applications made for the available funds.

Snowdonia National Park

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to protect the environment of Snowdonia national park from acidification caused by the burning of orimulsion fuel at Ince power station.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

There has been no increase in sulphur dioxide emissions from Ince power station as a result of the burning of orimulsion. Under agreements made between Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and Powergen, the operators of Ince, less than half of the station's 1,000 megawatts capacity is being used for the burning of orimulsion. Power production from the remaining 500 MW boiler has been curtailed to keep the sulphur dioxide emissions within the previous level for the plant as a whole.

Under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, the operator of every large combustion plant will be required to apply to HMIP by 1 May 1991 for an authorisation to continue operating the plant. In setting conditions in an authorisation, HMIP must aim to ensure the use of batneec to prevent or minimise releases of prescribed substances including SO2, and compliance with any plans set by the Secretary of State. These will include the plan for implementation of the large combustion plants directive. The Government's proposals for this will require substantial overall reductions in emissions of SO2 from Powergen's plants.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Trade Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the percentage increase in investment each year since 1979 in real terms in (a) chemicals, (b) man-made fibres, (c) textiles, (d) clothing, (e) footwear, (f) motor-vehicle manufacturing and (g) mechanical engineering: to what extent this has resulted in an increase in capacity; what has been the increase in the demand for such goods; and whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing in each case the increase in capacity since 1979, the increase in output as a percentage of 1979 and the figures for import penetration from the EEC and the rest of the world now and in 1979.

Mr. Leigh: The available information is shown in the tables: 1989 data are not yet available. Investment figures in real price terms are a matter for the Treasury. Statistics on capacity are not available.

United Kingdom demand: percentage changes

Per cent.

Notes:
1. The sectors are defined in terms of the Standard Industrial Classification (SIC), and the code references are shown in brackets.
2. United Kingdom demand is defined in terms of output (i.e. United Kingdom manufacturers' product sales) plus imports, less exports.
3. The import penetration figures are defined as imports from the E.C., or the Rest of the World, as a percentage of United Kingdom demand. Both 1980 and 1988 E.C. figures relate to imports from the current 11 member states (i.e. including Spain and Portugal). 1980 figures are given, as 1979 figures are not available in this form.
4. The percentage changes in demand and output are in current price terms.

Consumer Guarantees

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has for requiring consumer guarantees to be enforceable beyond the life of the company issuing them.

Mr. Leigh: The Government have no proposals for such legislation. The enforcement of long-term guarantees was considered by the Director General of Fair Trading in his report on consumer guarantees (June 1986). The report makes a number of recommendations on good practice and indicates that the Office of Fair Trading will keep this matter under review to see whether voluntary initiatives by industry can bring about improvements.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has for making guarantees issued on goods sold a liability to be taken into account by the Official Receiver on liquidation.

Mr. Redwood: The insolvency legislation—rule 13.12 of the insolvency rules 1986—already provides that contingent debts or liabilities that materialise after a company has gone into liquidation by reason of an obligation incurred before that date are provable claims in the proceedings. This in effect means that claims under valid guarantees are taken into account by the liquidator.

Auditing Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will propose legislation under which auditing firms would be banned from conducting public opinion polls for their audit clients.

Mr. Redwood: I see no reason for doing so. Under part II of the Companies Act 1989, the recognised supervisory bodies must have adequate rules and practices to ensure that company audit work is conducted properly and with integrity, and that persons are not appointed as company auditors in circumstances in which they have any interest likely to conflict with the proper conduct of the audit.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will propose legislation under which auditors would be prevented from issuing a disclaimer of opinion.

Mr. Redwood: No. Circumstances of fundamental uncertainty may occasionally arise in which the auditor is unable to form an opinion one way or the other on whether a set of accounts gives a true and fair view. In such circumstances, it is better that an auditor should decline to give an opinion than that he should be forced to give one which cannot, on the evidence available, be justified and could therefore be misleading.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements applicants for supervisory body status under the Companies Act have offered to enable a member of the public to ascertain whether an auditor (a) has derived 15 per cent. or more of his fee from any one client and (b) has lent money to an audit client.

Mr. Redwood: All the applications that we have received for recognition as supervisory bodies include guidance to the effect that an auditor should not lend money to an audit client, and should not in normal circumstances derive more than 15 per cent. of his fee income from one client.

Company Accounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of company accounts are lodged on time; what efforts are made to pursue late reports; and what studies he has carried out of the correlation between late reporting and subsequent company failures.

Mr. Redwood: Of the company accounts accepted by Companies house during the financial year 1989-90, 54 per cent. of those filed by public companies and 53 per cent. of those filed by private companies were received by the due date. A further 25 per cent. of public and 20 per cent. of private company accounts came in within three months of the due date. If accounts are not submitted within the statutory period allowed, a series of letters are issued. Action taken by Companies house can result in prosecution of the individual directors. There have been no studies carried out on the correlation between late reporting and subsequent company failure.

Single European Act

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the expected gains and losses to the United Kingdom expected under the Single European Act; what assessment has been made of the benefits to date; and if he will publish a table showing the current account balance on visible and invisible trade with the EEC in each of the past five years together with the forecast for this year and next.

Mr. Redwood: The single market is expected to raise the level of income in the European Community by removing the remaining barriers to trade between member states. The Cecchini report published by the European Commission in 1988 sets out the range of expected benefits to the Community as a whole. Projections for the United Kingdom are contained in table A 4.4 on page 622 of volume 2 of the report "Research on the cost of non-Europe—Basic findings—Studies on the economics of integration", which is available in the library. The benefits which ultimately accrue to the United Kingdom from the completion of the single market will depend crucially on the response of firms to the opportunities and challenges which it presents.

Figures on the United Kingdom's visible and invisible trade with the Community can be obtained from table 10.1 of "The Pink Book" United Kingdom Balance of Payments, which is also available in the Library. No forecasts are made for the trade balance with the Community.

Weights and Measures

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to increase the number of qualified inspectors of weights and measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: Inspectors of weights and measures are employed by the local weights and measures authorities and it is the responsibility of each of these authorities to recruit, train and retain sufficient qualified inspectors to enforce consumer protection legislation in their area.

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service for employees within his Department; and (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mr. Leigh: My Department uses the civil service occupational health service which employs some 100 fully qualified occupational health professionals—doctors, nurses and hygiene and safety advisers. The current total number of staff working for DTI is 12,345.

Defence Equipment Licensing

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what safeguards exist in the defence equipment licensing system to cover dual-use machinery.

Mr. Lilley: Industrial machinery which is capable of use for defence purposes (dual use) is subject to export licensing in the same way as defence equipment.

Export Controls

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions he and his ministerial colleagues have met representatives of industry to discuss licence applications for goods under the Exports of Goods (Control) Order 1987.

Mr. Lilley: I and my ministerial colleagues meet representatives of industry frequently to discuss many subjects, including export licence applications.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of his Department's handling of export licence applications by the firms, Walter Somers Ltd. and Sheffield Forgemasters Ltd.

Mr. Lilley: I have nothing to add to the statement made by my hon. Friend on 29 November at column 1060.

Environment Conferences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department was represented at, or provided information and documentation for, the conference on recycling in the future, organised by the Institute of Waste Management on 4 December.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 10 December 1990]: My Department was invited to participate in the conference on recycling in the future on 4 December, but was unable to attend due to other commitments. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment spoke at the conference.

Insolvency

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received proposing the introduction of procedures equivalent to chapter II of the United States bankruptcy code into British insolvency law.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 11 December 1990]: I have received no such representations. The effectiveness of United States procedures is sometimes discussed with officials of the Insolvency Service Executive Agency by some of those who are interested in the development of insolvency policy.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he proposes to review the working of the Insolvency Act.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 11 December 1990]: The working of the Insolvency Act 1986 is kept under review by the Insolvency Service Executive Agency.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 December 1990]: The information is as follows:

£000's[1]

	A Press Advertising	B Television and Radio Advertising	C Other promotional materials	D Films Audio-visual Slides
1985-86	1,216	—	877	242
1986-87	987	3	1,008	44
1987-88	3,417	5,721	1,501	263
1988-89	4,300	13,575	4,800	818
1989-90	5,656	5,900	11,353	739

[1] Figures for 1985-86—1988-89 relate to the Department's central publicity budget. The figure for 1989-90 includes expenditure by divisions which is in addition to that carried by the central publicity budget.

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 December 1990]: Departmental purchasing information systems do not differentiate between acquiring and commissioning goods and services. However, information on departmental purchasing expenditure from 1986-87 is set out in the annual reports of the central unit on purchasing, copies of which are available in the Library.

Reports

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 184, if he will place in the Library the Department of Trade and Industry reports listed along with the reports listed in the answers of 1 November, Official Report, column 657, 25 October, Official Report, column 272, 21 February, Official Report, column 789 and 19 December 1989, Official Report, columns 138-39.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 11 December 1990]: All reports to which the hon. Member refers are available in the Library.

Exports (Iraq)

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many approaches were made to his Department by Walter Somers querying the Iraqi order for equipment in respect of the supergun.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 December 1990]: Three: two directly and one indirectly on its behalf.

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the technical specifications of the steel ordered for the pipes intended for Iraq that were the subject of correspondence between his Department and Sheffield Forgemasters in July 1988.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 December 1990]: No. It is not the practice to reveal details of individual licensing inquiries.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department took when it was first made aware of the pipeline equipment built in the United Kingdom for Iraq having possible military implications.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 December 1990]: When the military implications of the equipment became clear the Department responsible for taking action was HM Customs and Excise. That Department acted with commendable swiftness to prevent the export of the equipment.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date his Department first became aware that an Iraqi export order was for military equipment.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 December 1990]: My Department first became aware that the Iraqi export order for steel tubes was for military equipment in April this year.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether officials of his Department made any statement or communication to the press prior to 18 April indicating his Department's opinion on whether the pipes impounded on Teesside by Her Majesty's Customs were for military purposes.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 December 1990]: No.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when his Department saw the contract involving Sheffield Forgemasters for the Iraqi order;

(2) whether, on receipt of the Forgemasters contract for the Iraqi order placed in 1988, his Department called for any further information from the company.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 December 1990]: My Department has not seen the contract to which the questions refer.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the Government's shareholding via British Steel in Sheffield Forgemasters when the order for the Iraqi gun was first placed with Forgemasters.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 December 1990]: In June 1988 the Government's shareholding via British Steel in Sheffield Forgemasters was 50 per cent.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the day on which his Department was first made aware of the military implications of the Iraqi contract with Sheffield Forgemasters and Walter Somers.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 December 1990]: My Department was first made aware of the military implications of the Iraqi contract with Sheffield Forgemasters and Walter Somers in April of this year.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many letters his Department sent in 1988 to Forgemasters about whether an export licence for the Iraqi contract was required; and what were the Department's conclusions on this matter.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 December 1990]: One letter was sent; on the basis of information provided by the company it was concluded that no licence was required.

PRIME MINISTER

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to raise the amendment conference of the 1963 partial nuclear test ban treaty, to be held in January 1991, when he meets the President of the United States.

The Prime Minister: We consult with the United States Administration on the partial test ban treaty at all levels.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to attend the opening session of the amendment conference of the partial test ban treaty in New York in January 1991.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to attend the partial test ban treaty amendment conference.

AIDS

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister if he will reconvene the Cabinet committee reviewing AIDS.

The Prime Minister: The Government will continue to pursue vigorously a strategy for dealing with AIDS, but I have no plans to establish a Cabinet committee specifically to consider AIDS issues.

Israel

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with Prime Minister Shamir.

The Prime Minister: I had a useful first meeting with Mr. Shamir. We discussed bilateral and regional issues including the immediate issue of the Gulf crisis, as well as the longer term issue of the Arab-Israel dispute.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service for employees within his Department, stating (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mr. Curry: This Department has access to the services of the civil service occupational health service which employs some 100 fully qualified occupational health professionals—doctors, nurses and hygiene and safety advisers. It operates via a network of regional offices throughout the United Kingdom. The Department, including its agencies, has 10,632 employees in total, none of whom is employed to provide occupational health services.

Pesticides

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the potential replacement of pesticides by mycoherbicides in respect of control of fungal diseases; what research his Department is presently undertaking or sponsoring; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Mycoherbicides are fungi which are used to control weeds; they are not capable of controlling fungal diseases.

Food Surpluses

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will meet his European colleagues to draw up plans to distribute the EEC's food surpluses to the Soviet Union in the form of aid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: No formal USSR request for food aid has yet been received by the Government. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs indicated at the Foreign Affairs Council on 4 December, the Government are ready to participate fully in any Community response to real shortages in the USSR to ensure food aid reaches those genuinely in need.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 10 and 11 December.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting of the Council together with my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), Parliamentary Secretary in my Department.

Agreement was reached on a directive laying down the principles covering veterinary checks on meat and other animal products entering the Community from third countries and laying down rules on the definition of vermouths. These were satisfactory for the United Kingdom.

Ministers agreed in principle to extend for a year the ban on the use of bovine somatotropin (BST) in the Community pending the results of relevant scientific experiments. This is a sensible approach which is expected to be formally agreed when the relevant Commission proposal comes forward which is expected to be very soon.

I took the opportunity to press the Commission to take steps to ensure that east European suppliers respect minimum prices when exporting soft fruit to the Community. The Commissioner showed sympathy with this request.

There was a discussion on the GATT round following the disappointing conclusion to the conference in Brussels last week. I pushed hard for a united Community position which provided a sufficient envelope for the Commission to be able to negotiate a satisfactory arrangement on agriculture which, as all recognise, would be a vital component in any final settlement.

THE ARTS

Arts Expenditure (Scotland)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the Government's total expenditure on the arts in Scotland for each of the past five years and as a total over the same period.

Mr. Renton: Government funding for the arts in Scotland is channelled through the Scottish Arts Council. Over the past five years the annual grant to the council has been as follows:

1990-91	17,451,000
1989-90	15,732,000
1988-89	15,358,000
1987-88	14,237,000
1986-87	13,584,000
Total	76,362,000

In addition, I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland funds a small number of performing arts organisations directly.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Community (Economic Benefits)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what studies have been undertaken to examine the net economic benefits to the United Kingdom of membership of the European Community.

Mr. Maude: Useful bibliographies of studies on some of the key policy issues can be found in various editions of the EC publication "European Economy".

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what increase in income tax would be required if the whole of the additional cost of transferring the total teachers' pay bill to the Exchequer was to be met from this source of revenue.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 26 November 1990]: Local education authorities in the United Kingdom are likely to spend nearly £10 billion on teachers' pay in 1990-91. The additional cost to central Government of transferring the responsibility for that spending would depend on the extent to which there was a reduction in the grant paid to local authorities.

Benefits in Kind

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue would be raised from treating all taxable benefits in kind as earnings for national insurance contributions in 1991-92.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 10 December 1990]: For 1991-92 it is estimated to be £750 million. This estimate is based on projections of data relating to 1987-88 and is provisional.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 11 December 1990]: Departmental purchasing information systems do not differentiate between acquiring and commissioning goods and services. However, information on departmental purchasing expenditure from 1986-87 is set out in the annual reports of the central unit on purchasing, copies of which are available in the Library.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Football

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the response from the football authorities to the Sports Minister's recent call for one body to represent both the Football League and Football Association.

Mr. Atkins: I understand that the Football Association council is to consider the proposals made by the Football League for a joint board of management at its meeting on 14 January. I welcome any constructive proposals for greater unity between the two bodies but the details of how this is achieved are matters for the football authorities.

Cricket

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures he is considering to promote the game of cricket in the community.

Mr. Atkins: The Sports Council already runs a number of schemes aimed at developing sport in the community. In announcing the council's grant in aid for 1991-92 I asked it to pay attention to developing initiatives for young people in partnership with cricket clubs and I know that they are now working up detailed proposals. I am also in touch with the Test and County Cricket Board, the National Cricket Association, the English Schools Cricket Association and the Marylebone Cricket Club on a regular basis to discuss these matters.

School Premises

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the organisations to be consulted in the review of the School Premises Regulations announced on 2 October; and when the consultation process is likely to begin.

Mr. Fallon: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 28 November, at column 421, regarding timing of consultations for the review. The list of consultees has not yet been finalised.

School Meals

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what the average cost of a school meal is in 1990 in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Fallon: In January 1990 the average cost[1] of a school meal in England was:

	Fixed charge[2] Pence	Authorised spend[3] Pence
Primary schools[4]	68	68
Secondary schools	72	74

[1] This is the simple average of the most common charge reported by individual local education authorities.
[2] This applies to dining centres.
[3] This applies to a cash cafeteria service.
[4] Includes nursery schools.

Research Councils

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Havant (Sir I. Lloyd) of 19 November, Official Report, column 30, he will make a further statement on his meeting with the chairman of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on priorities for United Kingdom science.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend will hold this meeting after he has received the board's advice on the allocation of the science budget for 1991-92 and later years, which is expected shortly.

Postgraduates (Fees)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what will be the tuition fee met under the awards arrangements for postgraduate students in the academic year 1991-92.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The maximum tuition fee reimbursed through the awards system for eligible home students and those from other European Community countries on full-time postgraduate courses will be increased from £1,985 in the current academic year to £2,104 in 1991-92. As for tuition fees for students on first degree and equivalent courses, fees will be paid in three termly instalments.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received the annual report of the Medical Research Council for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Medical Research Council has submitted to my right hon. and learned Friend its 1989-90 annual report under the requirements of the Science and Technology Act 1965, and we are placing a copy before the House today.

We were very interested to read of the good progress made in the year, and to learn about work in areas of current public concern such as AIDS research—where the council continues to work towards the development of effective vaccines and drugs to limit the progress of the disease. I was greatly encouraged that the council's income from contracts with industry has increased from £4·4 million in 1987-88 to £6·1 million in 1989-90, and that royalty income has more than doubled over the same period. I congratulate the MRC laboratory of molecular biology for winning, jointly with Cambridge Research Biochemicals, the Queen's award for technological achievement as a result of a successful collaboration on the generation of improved peptides.

I congratulate the council on these and other achievements and look forward to reading about further advances in next year's report.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Caribbean Countries (Aid)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the amount of bilateral aid per capita for each of the Caribbean countries, including Guyana.

Mrs. Chalker: Following are the figures for the latest available year:

	1. United Kingdom bilateral aid to Caribbean countries in 1989		2. Bilateral aid per capita[1]

Least-developed Countries

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the least-developed countries will benefit from the new initiatives related to aid procurement and local cost rules which were announced at the second United Nations conference on the least-developed countries in Paris in September.

Mrs. Chalker: Allowing least developed countries to which we provide aid to use some of our aid funds to procure from other poor countries, as well as from the United Kingdom, should make a positive contribution to trade between developing countries and help to achieve good value for money from the aid programme.

The removal of limits on the extent to which our bilateral financial aid to the least developed countries can be used to meet local costs should give added flexibility in ensuring that our aid meets the most pressing needs of recipients.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of gross national product is currently spent on aid to the least-developed countries; and if he has any plans to raise this to meet the United Nations targets for such spending.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1989 Britain's net official development assistance to the 42 countries presently classified by the United Nations as least developed was 0·10 per cent. of GNP. In the programme of action adopted by the Second UN Conference on the least developed held in Paris on 3-14 September 1990 no target applicable to all donors was established. The UK along with several other donors undertook to make our best efforts to reach the previously agreed UN target of 0·15 per cent. Over 60 per cent. of our bilateral aid in 1989 was provided to the poorest fifty countries.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the criteria by which the least-developed countries are adjudged to meet the requirements of good governance.

Mrs. Chalker: The criteria for least developed countries are the same as for other recipients of our aid. They were set out in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's speech to the Overseas Development Institute of 6 June.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the second United Nations conference on the least-developed countries held in Paris in September.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him of 29 October 1990, which said:

"The Government welcome the outcome of the second United Nations conference on the least developed held in Paris from 3-14 September and will support those least developed countries which implement the policies outlined in the programme of action.

The British delegation to the conference was led by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The Delegation played an active and positive role in the negotiations for the programme of action for the 1990s adopted by the Conference. Two new British initiatives relating to aid tying and local costs rules, which will be of direct benefit to the least developed countries, were announced at the conference. The delegation kept in close contact with British non-governmental organisations, both before and during the conference. The booklet 'LLDCs in the 1990s: Development or Oblivion' was taken into account in formulating the United Kingdom position on the various issues."—[Official Report, 29 October 1990; Vol. 178, c. 361.]

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cambodia

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in Cambodia.

Mr. Hurd: As one of the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council, Britain has played an active role in continuing diplomatic efforts to resolve the Cambodian conflict. In August 1990 the five agreed on a framework for a comprehensive political settlement. This was accepted in its entirety by the Cambodian parties in September when they also agreed to form a Supreme National Council (SNC) which will embody national sovereignty and represent Cambodia at the United Nations. The framework was subsequently endorsed unanimously by the Security Council and the General Assembly.

The five's framework was elaborated into a full-scale draft agreement at meetings in Jakarta from 9-10 November and in Paris from 23-26 November. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. The document covers the major aspects of a settlement, including the proposed mandate for a UN Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC); a ceasefire and related military measures; elections; the repatriation of Cambodian refugees and displaced persons; and principles for a new constitution. A draft agreement guaranteeing the sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and inviolability, neutrality and national unity of Cambodia; and a declaration on Cambodia's rehabilitation and reconstruction were also produced.

Our objective remains a durable settlement which will enable the Cambodian people to choose their own Government free from the fear of Khmer Rouge atrocities, invasion or civil war. We believe that the five's plan offers the best chance of this. It is now up to the Cambodians to play their part, firstly by resolving the differences between them which have so far prevented the Supreme National Council from functioning; and by stopping the fighting. It will then be possible for the French and Indonesian co-chairmen to reconvene the Paris international conference on Cambodia to complete work on the settlement documents and formally adopt them. We hope that will happen soon.

Antarctica

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries proposing a protocol at the Antarctic conference in Chile and those Antarctic treaty consultative parties who support the proposal.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Argentina, Norway, Uruguay, the United Kingdom and the United States had proposed, before the meeting, that a protocol to the Antarctic treaty, together with annexes setting out detailed rules on specific activities, would provide a practical means of protecting the Antarctic environment.

This proposal, together with illustrative draft protocols tabled by the United Kingdom and United States of America, and a draft protocol tabled by New Zealand, together with a proposal for separate convention tabled by France and Australia, were discussed at the meeting. The outcome of these discussions is set out in paragraphs 18-20 of the report of the meeting as follows:

"18. Detailed discussion of the various proposals led to the conclusion that there was unanimous support for the need to adopt a new legally binding international instrument for the protection of the Antarctic environment and its dependent and associated ecosystems. Although the proposed texts represented alternative options, there was a considerable measure of agreement as to the general structure of such a legal instrument. A member of one delegation, Mr. Rolf Trolle Andersen from Norway, presented, on a personal basis, a single text drawing upon the documents mentioned in paragraph 9 as well as on draft articles proposed in the Working Group I and sub-groups.

19. The Meeting agreed that this draft Protocol and Annexes should be attached to this Report as Annex F. Reflecting, as it does, the papers submitted and the discussions at the XIth Antarctic Treaty Special Consultative Meeting, it would form a valuable basis for further work to be undertaken at a future session of XIth Antarctic Treaty Special Consultative Meeting in 1991. It was understood that these texts would not prejudice the position of any government with regard to the issues addressed therein nor any proposals already made.

20. The Meeting noted that the present restraint on Antarctic mineral resource activities continues. In the context of future work on the issue addressed in Article 6 of the attached Protocol, a number of delegations expressed their strong preference for a permanent ban, others continued to see merit in CRAMRA, but there was a widespread willingness to consider a lengthy prohibition or moratorium. Several aspects of this issue, in particular the circumstances and modalities under which a prohibition might be reviewed or terminated needed further consideration. In regard to a moratorium, it was stressed that internationally agreed arrangements for taking decisions on mineral resource activities should be in place before the need for such decisions arises."

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Antarctic treaty negotiations.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The XIth special consultative meeting of the Antarctic treaty parties ended in Chile on 6 December. A copy of the interim report of the meeting is being placed in the Library of the House. When final texts of the annexes to the report are available, they will be added to the report.

Anti-Semitism

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has discussed the problem of anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union and east Europe with the Governments of those countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed with Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze the problem of anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union during his visit to Moscow in September. At the CSCE Paris summit in November, all participant states signed the charter of Paris for a new Europe which contained a statement of determination to combat anti-Semitism.

Arms Control Meeting

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has entered into any correspondence with any individual or organisations on any matter raised during the meeting with non-governmental organisations on arms control, non-proliferation and disarmament held at his Department on 23 October.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have written to two non-governmental organisations to amplify points raised during the meeting which the hon. Member refers to. The proceedings were held under Chatham house rules and were thus off the record.

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department plans to produce and distribute any briefing material on the amendment conference of the partial test ban treaty, to be held in New York in January 1991.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The partial test ban treaty amendment conference is addressed in the arms control briefing material published regularly by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any research is presently being conducted by his Department towards assisting technical advances in verification of nuclear test locations and magnitudes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Research into the verification of nuclear testing is the responsibility of the Ministry of Defence, which has maintained an active programme in this field for more than 30 years.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his current assessment of the attitudes of other states party to the partial test ban treaty towards establishment of a comprehensive nuclear test ban at the conference in New York in January 1991.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We cannot comment on the attitudes of other Governments to the partial test ban treaty amendment conference.

Israel

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Prime Minister or Government of Israel concerning the third anniversary of the intifada on 9 December; what is the latest information available to his Department on the numbers (a) killed, (b) injured, (c) deported, or (d) arrested during the intifada; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We estimate that since the outbreak of intifada, 858 Palestinians have been killed by the Israeli defence forces, 58 deported and about 10,000 held in administrative detention. Figures for the wounded range from an Israeli estimate of about 13,000 to the Palestine human rights information centre's estimate of about 100,000. These figures speak for themselves and show clearly the urgent need for a settlement to the underlying political dispute. We continue to underline the importance of this in our contacts with the Israeli Government, as well as the need for maximum restraint by the Israeli defence forces.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many people would qualify for the disability working allowance if the requirement to be in receipt of other benefits was removed.

Mr. Scott: The number of people who would qualify for disability working allowance would depend on the disability test adopted.

Income Support

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost in 1991-92 of restoring entitlement to income support to 16 and 17-year-olds at (a) the rate for those aged 18 to 24 years, and (b) the rate for those aged 25 years or over.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is not available to calculate the costs of restoring entitlement to income support to 16 and 17-year-olds.

I regret that the answer which was given by my hon. Friend the former Parliamentary Under-Secretary to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 26 July at column 494 was consequently incorrect. The costs then quoted related not to the costs of changing the basis of entitlement but only to the costs of increasing the rate of income support for 16 and 17-year-olds who would satisfy the current entitlement conditions.

The best estimates that can now be made of the costs of increasing entitlement remain the same as those given earlier, that is, an annual £10 million in relation to the rate of income support of those aged 18 to 24 and an annual £150 million in relation to the rate for those aged 25 or over. More precise estimates are not available because of the unquantifiable interaction between youth training and income support.

I have written to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon).

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service for employees within his Department, stating (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mr. Jack: In common with other civil service departments and agencies, the Department of Social Security uses the civil service occupational health service (CSOHS) for the provision of occupational health services for its 76,096 full-time and 9,061 part-time employees. The CSOHS employs some 100 fully qualified occupational health professionals—doctors, nurses and hygiene and safety advisers—and operates through a network of regional offices throughout the United Kingdom. The Department employs 18 staff who are also qualified nurses engaged on occupational health including the treatment of sick members of staff and first-aid responsibilities.

Young Persons (Benefits)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to amend the rules regarding those persons aged 16 and 17 years and entitlement to benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no such plans. The Government's policy of guaranteeing a youth training place to all 16 and 17-year-olds who want one removes the need for them to become dependent on benefit.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons aged 16 and 17 years receiving special hardship allowance are (a) living independently and (b) living in board and lodging.

Miss Widdecombe: Special hardship allowance was replaced by reduced earnings allowance from 1 October 1986. I assume that the question concerns 16 and 17-year-olds receiving severe hardship payments of income support. The information is not available in the form requested. However, in the week ending 30 November 1990 the numbers of 16 and 17-year-olds for whom a direction was made enabling income support to be awarded, under the severe hardship provision, was as follows:

	Number
Living independently	147
In lodging	240

A further 12 directions were made for which the requested information is unavailable.

Taxes and Benefits

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table similar to those used in the tax benefit model showing net weekly spending patterns for (a) a single person, (b) a couple with two children aged under 11 years with one earner, (c) a couple with two children aged under 11 years with two earners, (d) a lone parent with one child under 11 years old and (e) a lone parent with two children under 11 years in the old tax and benefit system before the 1988 social security changes and in 1990 in the following weekly £10 bands of income from £60 to £170.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is contained in the published tax-benefit model tables for the years in question, copies of which are available in the Library. I regret that it is not possible to provide an answer to (c), since the hon. Member has not stipulated whether income is gross or net; whether it is just earnings and how it is divided between the two earners. This will affect the amount of income tax and national insurance contributions paid and the amount of income-related benefits to which the family is entitled.

Family Credit

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people will lose without transitional protection under his proposals in "Children Come First" from the change in the definition of full-time work from 24 hours to 16 hours; and what the cost of transitional protection will be.

Miss Widdecombe: The majority of people receiving income support and working between 16 and 24 hours at the point of change will qualify for family credit and will be better off. We expect that some 25,000 people will be entitled to receive protection at an estimated cost of £25 million in the first year (1990-91 prices), decreasing thereafter.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average number of days it takes to process a family credit claim for (a) all claimants, (b) employees and (c) the self-employed.

Mr. Jack: For the 12 months ending 30 November 1990 the average was as follows:

	Working days
All claimants	18·45
Employees	17·01
Self-employed	26·90

A fast path arrangement is available to people who have just started work after being on unemployment benefit or income support, and which enables family credit to be put into payment very quickly.

Benefits (Monitoring)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16 and 17-year-olds have been interviewed by his Department's staff under the provisions announced on 13 March 1989, Official Report, columns 27-28.

Miss Widdecombe: Information about the number of 16 and 17-year-olds interviewed by local office staff is not available. However, between 1 April 1989 and 30 November 1990, 39,341 claims were referred after interview to the severe hardship claims unit for consideration of payment under the severe hardship provisions.

Community Care

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make extra funds available for community care grants for his Department's offices in Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Housing Benefit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many local authority tenants of pensionable age in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole, are in receipt of (i) full housing benefit and (ii) partial housing benefit; and what proportion they are of the total number of local authority tenants of pensionable age in (a), (b) and (c).

Miss Widdecombe: It is estimated that the number of people aged 60 and over in receipt of rent rebates at 31 May 1989 for Scotland was:

	Thousands	Percentage of LA tenants[1]
Claimants in receipt of rent rebate and also in receipt of income support	105,000	(24)
Claimants in receipt of rent rebate and not in receipt of income support	156,000	(35)
Total	261,000	(59)

[1] LA tenants are men aged 65 and over; and women aged 60 and over.

Source:
(a) Housing Benefit Management Information System annual statistical enquiry, and
(b) Department of Employment Labour Force Survey April 1989.

Information concerning the number of housing benefit recipients aged 60 and over in Greenock and Port Glasgow and Strathclyde is not available.

Benefits (Monitoring)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of his Department's staff have been trained to deal with the requirements of 16 and 17-year-olds under the procedures announced on 13 March 1989, Official Report, columns 27-28; what was the training involved; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: No records are held of the number of staff who have been trained. All appropriate staff receive technical training in the income support benefit provisions for 16 and 17-year-olds. Specialised training is provided for staff who interview young people under the severe hardship provisions, to enable them to recognise the needs of this vulnerable group.

Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the state earnings-related pension payable in each year since 1978; and if he will give a projection for each year to 1999 based on earnings rising by 1·5 per cent. above prices each year for (a) a full-time worker consistently earning half the average wage, using average gross weekly earnings for all full-time workers on adult rates in all industries and services excluding those whose pay was affected by absence, (b) a full-time worker consistently earning the average wage, as above and (c) the maximum addition payable.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 6 December 1990]: The information requested is set out in the table.

The weekly amounts of additional pension payable on retirement on 6th April in the stated year are as follows, for:

Year of Retirement	(a)	(b)	(c)
1978	0·00	0·00	0·00
1979	0·30	0·85	1·30
1980	0·75	1·95	2·90
1981	1·35	3·35	5·25
1982	2·10	5·55	8·45
1983	2·85	7·55	11·70
1984	3·60	9·80	15·10
1985	4·55	12·05	19·10
1986	5·55	14·70	23·25
1987	6·85	18·00	28·50
1988	8·40	21·70	34·00
1989	10·25	26·10	40·45
1990	12·70	31·85	48·65
1991	14·70	36·90	56·00
1992	16·85	42·45	63·65
1993	19·20	48·15	72·05
1994	22·05	54·85	81·35
1995	25·00	62·10	91·40
1996	28·30	70·10	102·35
1997	32·00	78·95	114·30
1998	36·10	88·65	127·35

(a) A person on one-half of average earnings.
(b) A person on average earnings.
(c) A person earning at or above the Upper Earnings Limit.

Notes: From 1990 onwards 5 per cent. prices and 6·5 per cent. earnings growth is assumed.
Average earnings are those for all full-time workers on adult rates in all industries and services, excluding those affected by absence.

Glasgow East End Community Conference

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total cost to public funds of the Glasgow east end community conference in 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I have been asked to reply.

The east end management unit has estimated the direct cost to public funds of the Glasgow east end community conference for the years in question to have been as follows:

1988	6,400
1989	12,700
1990	14,825

HEALTH

General Practitioners

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on patients being required to change general practitioners because of their failure to agree to have such tests as cervical smears.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There have been a number of allegations, but no hard evidence to suggest that patients are being forced to change GP for such reasons. Such behaviour would be highly unprofessional.

Nuclear Industry Workers

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will commission a study of the incidence of retinoblastoma in the offspring of nuclear industry workers.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department and the Health and Safety Executive are finalising the contractual arrangements for detailed epidemiological studies into the health of offspring of individuals who are occupationally exposed to radiation. These studies will include data on the incidence of all cancers in the offspring of radiation workers where relevant.

Sexual Behaviour

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to establish a national survey of sexual behaviour.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Stationery

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Lord President of the Council what quantity of office and correspondence paper is used annually by hon. Members and staff in the House; and how much it costs.

Mr. MacGregor: The approximate total cost of stationery items supplied to the House by HMSO during the year from 1 october 1989 to 31 September 1990 was £333,000. The individual quantities of each of these items could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Information Technology

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposals he has to make the Official Report and other parliamentary documents available to hon. Members and the public on compact disc.

Mr. MacGregor: HMSO and Chadwyck-Healey Limited plan to launch the Official Report on compact disc (CD-ROM) during 1991. This is a joint venture and the discs will be made available commercially, although the pricing structure has yet to be finalised. The intention is to include initially at least the previous Session plus the current Session, with cumulatively updated discs being issued following each recess. Users with an IBM-compatible personal computer equipped with a CD-ROM drive will be able rapidly to search and access the text by keying in a significant word or combination of words.

A separate joint venture involving HMSO and Context Limited should also see the appearance in 1991 of statutory instruments on CD-ROM.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord President of the Council if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) of 19 November, Official Report, column 24, he will set out details of the specific energy conservation projects, better housekeeping and energy-conscious design of facilities in the House.

Mr. MacGregor: I will write to the hon. Member.

DEFENCE

The Gulf

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the level of pay and allowances, and the standard of equipment, including clothing, provided to British troops in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has already made it clear that no member of the armed forces will suffer financially as a result of being posted to the Gulf. Sufficient desert pattern combat clothing has been delivered to meet the needs of the personnel in theatre. More is on order for the additional troops that will deploy with 4 Brigade and 1 Armoured Division. Equipment provided to British troops in the Gulf has been trialled and tested extensively, much of it in hot, dry climates. The equipment in the Gulf is performing well.

Contracts

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of defence contracts in the calendar year 1989 was awarded directly to small and medium-sized enterprises.

Mr. Alan Clark: I regret that this information is not readily available at the present time.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he plans to reduce the numbers of Ministry of Defence police based at Brizlee Wood, Northumberland; and if he has anything to add to his answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 234.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Mr. Hamilton) to the hon. Member for Walsall, South (Mr. George) on 3 December 1990, Official Report, column 51. Brizlee Wood is one of the sites concerned.

United States Nuclear Laboratories

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, South of 21 November, Official Report, column 135, he will set out (a) the number of officials who have visited, respectively, Los Alamos, Lawrence Livermore and Sandia research laboratories, (b) the purpose for each visit, (c) the cost of each visit, (d) the dates of each visit and (e) the benefits of the visits to which he made reference.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been the policy of successive British Governments not to disclose such detailed information on visits made under the terms of the 1958 US-UK agreement for co-operation on the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes.

Dartmouth Naval College

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of the Dartmouth naval college; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Following my right hon. Friend's statement on 25 July on "Options for Change", the future of the whole of the naval estate and support services is under consideration. Any announcements of changes will be made at the appropriate time.

Iraq

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current assessment of Iraq's capability of constructing a nuclear explosive device.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We assess that Iraq is not currently capable of constructing a nuclear explosive device.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there have been any visits to the atomic weapons establishments at (a) Aldermaston, (b) Burghfield and (c) Llanishen by scientific experts from (i) the United States and (ii) the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in the current year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the current year United States officials have visited all three of these establishments under the terms of the 1958 United States/United Kingdom agreement for co-operation on the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes. There have been no visits by Soviet officials.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what funds were allocated to the atomic weapons establishment in 1990; and what will be the level of funding in 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is not our practice to disclose information of this kind on funding of the nuclear programme.

SCOTLAND

Cleveland Fuels (Pollution)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the chairman of Clydeside against Pollution opposing Cleveland Fuels proposals to install an incinerator at Clyde street, Renfrew; and what reply he has sent.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A letter from the group Clydeside against Pollution was received on 4 December 1990 and was acknowledged by Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate on 7 December 1990. In that it makes further representation about the application by Cleveland Fuels Ltd. for registration of an incinerator works in Renfrew under section 9(1) of the Alkali etc. Works Regulation Act 1906, Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate will take account of its contents during their consideration of the application.

Govan Initiative

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if Govan Initiative has used public funds to purchase or lease the premises at 6 Harmony Row, Govan.

Mr. Allan Stewart: No.

University Students

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research he has commissioned on the reasons for the reduction in numbers of students in the Scottish universities since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There was no reduction in the numbers of students in Scottish universities between 1979-80 and 1988-89. The number of full-time undergraduate students at Scottish universities rose over the period from 38,570 to 42,870, an increase of more than 10 per cent.

Council Houses

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many council houses he expects will be completed during 1990-91.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In their housing plan checklists which were submitted to the Scottish Development Department in November, local authorities estimate that they will complete approximately 1,181 houses in the financial year 1990-91.

Homelessness

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are classed as homeless in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Over the 12 months to 31 March 1990, the numbers of households which applied under the homeless persons legislation and were assessed by local authorities as homeless, as recorded in the returns submitted to the Scottish Development Department, were as follows:

	Number
Inverclyde district	142
Strathclyde region[1]	4,812
Scotland[1]	10,962

[1] provisional.

Residential Homes

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if police forces give information to directors of social work departments on any criminal records of persons who apply for registration of ownership of homes which care for persons who are severely mentally handicapped; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Yes. Information of this kind is provided by the Scottish criminal records office on request to designated senior officers in social work departments.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many suggestions he has received concerning alternatives to the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend regularly receives correspondence proposing improvements to the community charge and possible alternatives to it. These views will be taken into account during the Government's review of the community charge.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many merchant seamen have been granted exemption from poll tax obligations by way of decisions taken by (a) community charge registration officers and (b) sheriffs upon appeals made by merchant seamen against decisions made by community charge registration officers.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Information on decisions as to where individuals are solely or mainly resident is not held centrally.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the progress of his latest review of the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Government have made it clear that the review is to be conducted on a Great Britain basis and will involve the Secretaries of State for the Environment, for Scotland and for Wales. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will of course, be paying particular attention to Scottish aspects of the review.

Forestry Grants

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Government have any plans to review the rates of grant for forestry planting.

Mr. Lang: The Government considered the rates of grant for broadleaved planting as part of their recent review of broadleaves policy, the outcome of which was announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) in reply to a question from my hon. Friend on 23 July, Official Report, columns 6-11.

We concluded that against the background of the considerable expansion in broadleaved planting that had taken place since we introduced our new broadleaves policy in 1985, and given the substantial rise in grant rates which accompanied the introduction of the woodland grant scheme in 1988, there was no evidence that the planting grants on offer were inadequate. At the same time, however, we were able to announce that woodland management grants would be introduced under the woodland grant scheme for both broadleaved and conifer woodlands from 1 April 1992, with enhanced rates of grant for woodlands of special environmental value. This move has been widely welcomed.

We have also received the rates of grant for conifer planting and, as with broadleaves, we have concluded that there is no convincing case at present for general increases under the Forestry Commission's grant schemes. There has been a drop in conifer planting, but it is our view that this has been due not to any inadequacy in grant rates as such but to a combination of factors, including the price and availability of suitable land and the general economic situation.

Nevertheless, it remains an important part of our forestry policy that a higher proportion of planting should take place on low ground of better quality than hitherto. We have therefore decided to increase the better land supplement of £200 per hectare, which is available as a top-up grant under the woodland grant scheme for planting on arable land or grassland which has been cultivated and improved within the previous ten years. The new rates will be £400 per hectare for conifer planting and £600 per hectare for planting with broadleaves, and will apply to any eligible planting done under the scheme on or after 1 October 1990. The supplement is not available under the farm woodland scheme, for which special annual payments are made by the agriculture departments.

The cost of the higher supplements will be in the region of £1 million per annum; this will be met from within existing resources.

I am sure that these increases in the better land supplement will lead to considerably more planting on better land "down the hill" and that they will be welcomed by landowning and environmental interests alike.

Higher Education

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the adult population is now in higher education; what was the figure in 1978-79; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 December 1990]: The number of adults in full-time higher education in Scotland in 1988-89, expressed as a percentage of the Scottish population aged 21 to 34 was 3·5 per cent. The equivalent figure for 1985-86 was 3 per cent. Information on the numbers of adults in higher education in years before 1985-86 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The provisional figure for the proportion of young Scots entering higher education in 1989-90 has risen to over 24 per cent. compared with 21 per cent. in 1988-89.

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 December 1990]: Scottish Office purchasing information systems do not differentiate between acquiring and commissioning goods and services. Information on the Scottish Office total purchasing expenditure, from 1986-87, is, however, reproduced in the annual report of the Treasury's central unit on purchasing, copies of which are available in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

9. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have been prosecuted for non-payment of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Department does not have this information, but I understand that most authorities in England have now started their enforcement procedures.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, Official Report, 26 November, column 259, he will give further information for those local authorities for which information is missing in the material deposited in the Library.

Mr. Key: Five local authorities have sent in returns to my Department since the previous answer I gave to the hon. Member.

	Authority
	Birmingham	Purbeck	Three Rivers	Warwick	York
Number of people who have made a payment in respect of a personal community charge by 30 September 1990	474,409	32,379	53,554	89,750	64,949
Number of people liable who have not made a payment in respect of a personal community charge by 30 September 1990	187,704	1,309	6,360	11,750	11,594
Proportion of charge payers making a payment Per cent.	71·7	96·1	89·4	88·4	84·9

36. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the projected shortfall in collection of the poll tax in Liverpool for the current financial year.

Mr. Key: The Department does not have this information, but I understand that in the current financial year Liverpool has budgeted for £7,500,000 for community charge debts.

28. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the personal community charges set in the current year in the boroughs of Gravesham and Thurrock.

Mr. Key: The figures are as follows: Gravesham £294; Thurrock £417.

29. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to transfer the educational component of local authority spending to the Exchequer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have announced that we shall be undertaking a fundamental review of local government finance and structure.

21. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for changes to the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

24. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received seeking the repeal of the community charge.

26. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement about his policy on a review of the poll tax.

30. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on further proposals he is now considering for reform of the community charge.

34. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake a fundamental review of the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today.

Home Improvement Grants

17. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has had any discussions with the local authorities associations about the operation of the home improvement grant system.

Mr. Yeo: Officials from my Department have done so regularly, most recently on 30 November.

National Rivers Authority

19. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number of prosecutions undertaken by the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Heseltine: I understand that the National Rivers Authority brought 3,997 successful prosecutions for all types of offences during its first year of operation. Of these, 3,549 were for fisheries offences, 370 for water pollution offences, 59 for navigational offences and 19 for water resources offences. I shall be reviewing progress with Lord Crickhowell in the near future.

I attach great importance to securing improvements in environmental standards wherever they are needed. We have established an environmental and economic framework within which decisions will be taken.

Council Housing

20. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many additional council houses he anticipates being completed during 1990-91.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities are expecting to complete about 13,000 houses during 1990-91. The Government see housing associations as the main providers of additional subsidised housing for rent. Public funding for associations through the Housing Corporation will increase from £1·1 billion this year to over £2 billion by 1993-94. Together with their increased ability to draw in private funds, this will permit a sustained increase in output of subsidised housing by associations over the next few years.

Homelessness

22. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many children are currently housed by local authorities in bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Sir George Young: This information is not available centrally.

25. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of people who will be homeless this Christmas.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that was given by my hon. Friend the then Minister of Housing and Planning on Tuesday 27 November 1990 to the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howarth).

Housing Associations

23. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with tenants of housing associations in London on the subject of home ownership.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend receives representations on this subject from a variety of sources, including housing association tenants and their representatives.

Buy British Policy

27. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has a buy British policy.

Mr. Heseltine: We seek to achieve value for money and to honour our international obligations.

Nature Conservancy Council

31. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council to discuss reorganisation.

Mr. Trippier: Ministers from my Department have met the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council on a number of occasions during the last 18 months at which the Government's proposals to reorganise the Nature Conservancy Council were discussed.

Methane Gas

32. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps can be taken to reduce or eliminate any hazard resulting from the escape of methane gas from domestic rubbish dumps.

Mr. Trippier: A number of technical solutions are available to reduce or eliminate the hazard resulting from the escape of landfill gas, which contains methane, from landfill sites containing domestic waste. Guidance on these measures is given in the Department's waste management paper No. 27—"Control of Landfill Gas".

Water Charges

33. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to require water companies to charge for their services by means of (a) a flat-rate charge per property or (b) a water poll tax.

Mr. Trippier: No. Methods of charging for their services are for individual water companies to determine.

Housing Action Trusts

35. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many housing action trusts have been established.

Mr. Yeo: No housing action trusts have so far been established. However, discussions are proceeding with the council and tenants in the London borough of Waltham Forest, and Hull city council is consulting tenants about the proposal for a housing action trust for the North Hull estate.

Rented Housing

37. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to build houses for rent at reasonable prices for those people who cannot afford to buy houses.

Sir George Young: The Government see housing associations as the main providers of additional subsidised housing where it is needed. Public funding for the Housing Corporation will increase from £1·1 billion this year to over £2 billion by 1993-94. Together with their increased ability to draw in private funds, this will permit a sustained increase in output of low-cost housing by associations over the next few years.

Victoria Tower

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ealing, North, 30 November, Official Report, column 500, if he will indicate the depth beneath ground level of the support structures for the scaffolding recently erected on the Victoria Tower; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The answer is 21 m.

Catalytic Reduction Technology

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent assessment he has made of the potential environmental benefits of selective catalytic reduction technology in respect of large combustion plants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has recently received a report on NOx abatement technologies which includes an assessment of the performance of selective catalytic reduction technology. The report is currently being considered.

Birds

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all changes to the protection or quarry status of bird species in the United Kingdom since the enactment of the Wildlife and Countryside Act.

Mr. Baldry: There have been no changes to the status of any bird species since the Act came into force.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether capercaillie and black grouse are still quarry species in the United Kingdom; and if he has any plans to alter their status.

Mr. Baldry: Both capercaillie and black grouse may be hunted in the open season. There are no plans at present to alter these arrangements.

Bathing Waters

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will set maximum limits for the presence of salmonella and enterovirus in bathing waters;

(2) what plans he has to ensure compliance with the salmonella and enterovirus standards in the EC bathing water directive.

Mr. Baldry: The EC bathing water directive sets limits for salmonella and enteroviruses. The limits are zero salmonella in 1 litre and zero enteroviruses in 10 litres in 95 per cent. of bathing water samples. It is widely accepted that these standards are deficient and have no regard to risks to public health: the Environment Select Committee has recently endorsed this view. The European Commission has brought forward proposals for a committee of adaptation to review the bathing water directive. One of its remits would be to look at those standards. This Government have supported the need for such a review. Pending adoption of revised standards we shall continue to monitor and report in accordance with the directive, but our assessment of compliance will be based on its coliform standards.

Community Forests

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made towards the establishment of community forests on the outskirts of towns and cities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Project teams have been set up in east London, south Staffordshire and Tyne and Wear to prepare business plans for the forests launched in those areas. In addition the Countryside Commission is considering proposals for forests at various other locations.

RECHAR

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the rules governing local authority finance in those areas which militate against local authorities being able to fully take up grants under European Community programmes, in particular the RECHAR scheme.

Mr. Yeo: In setting annually the level of public expenditure programmes for local authorities, account is taken of anticipated European Community receipts so that these programmes are larger than they would otherwise be. However, in addition for 1990-91 the other services block was "top sliced" by £25 million for distribution as supplementary credit approvals to local authorities in receipt of European regional development fund. In the light of representations received from local authorities it is proposed to increase the top slice to £45 million for this purpose in 1991-92.

Emissions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy with regard to the application to large combustion plants by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution of the BATNEEC provisions in the Environment Protection Act where these provisions require stricter standards than those in the national emission reduction plan.

Mr. Baldry: Under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution must, among other things, ensure the use of BATNEEC and compliance with any plan made by the Secretary of State. Where one of these requirements is more onerous than the other, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution must include conditions in authorisations which achieve the more onerous standards.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to exempt the electricity generation industry from the new BATNEEC guidance notes being issued by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Baldry: No.

Public Paths

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Hampshire on his policy regarding the reclassification of public paths; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have received a number of representations both from local councils and individuals. While I appreciate the concern expressed about the possible effects of reclassifying roads used as public paths (RUPPs) as byways open to all traffic (BOATs), the regulation of use by vehicles, were necessary, is a separate management issue. There are already appropriate powers available to highway authorities. However, the rights of way review committee is presently considering a number of issues relating to the use of vehicles in the countryside, and I look forward to hearing its views.

Fire Advisory Panel

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he takes to ensure that the advice he receives from his fire advisory panel is completely impartial.

Mr. Yeo: The fire advisory panel has been established to provide a forum for the discussion of technical issues related to fire safety aspects of the Building Regulations 1985. The panel draws its membership from across the whole field of fire safety in buildings, and from both the public and private sectors, and this wide spectrum of professional expertise safeguards the impartiality of the panel's advice. A further safeguard is provided by the need for proposals from the panel for changes to the regulations to be considered by the Building Regulations Advisory Committee, which has the statutory responsibility of advising the Secretary of State on them.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to revise the membership of his fire advisory panel.

Mr. Yeo: Membership of the fire advisory panel is kept under regular review. A technical expert from the Loss Prevention Council has recently been invited to join the panel.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he takes to ensure that the membership of his fire advisory panel is fully representative of all aspects of the fire safety limits.

Mr. Yeo: Membership of the fire advisory panel includes representatives from the Home Office, the Scottish Development Department, and the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) as well as of my Department. Non-governmental members include fire safety consultants, architects, building control officers, representatives of the fire service, and technical experts from universities, fire testing organisations, the building materials industry, and the fire insurance industry. The secretariat is provided by the fire research station. The panel therefore already has available a wide range of experience and expertise, but whenever gaps are identified, steps are taken to fill them.

Landfill Gas

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on contracts recently placed by his Department to prepare guidelines for the safety and environmental management of landfill gas recovery.

Mr. Baldry: Such a contract was let in June 1990. It is jointly funded by the Department of the Environment, the Department of Energy, via the Energy Technology Support Unit, and the Office of Gas Supply. It should be completed by next summer.

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to which international treaties and conventions which cover the impairment of the environment caused by the spillage, leakage or discharge of radioactive substances is the United Kingdom a party.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom is party to many international treaties and conventions concerned with the discharge of radioactive substances to the environment. In particular, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the European Communities conventions on early notification of a nuclear accident require that signatories should inform the relevant international organisation whenever there is an accident from which an international transboundary release is likely to occur that could be of radiological significance for another state.

Litter

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has made an order under section 90(3) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to describe land as litter control areas for the purposes of designation by local authorities;

(2) if he will list those organisations he intends to consult about the implementation of section 90(3) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Baldry: No order has yet been made under section 90 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. We do, however, intend to consult on a draft order in the near future and are currently finalising the list of those to be consulted. I will ensure that the hon. Member is sent a copy. If he wishes to suggest the names of bodies which should be consulted, I invite him to pass them on to my office.

Beach Pollution

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government response to the Environment Select Committee report on pollution of beaches will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Government response is being published today and a copy has been placed in the Library. We welcome the report as pollution of beaches is a matter of great public concern and is something that we are taking active steps to combat.

The Government are committed to improving the quality of bathing waters. In 1990 77 per cent. of our 446 identified bathing waters met European standards compared with only 51 per cent. in 1986. A major investment in the sewerage system around our coasts of £1·4 billion was announced last year to bring all our bathing waters up to European standards.

The Select Committee report coincided with a major Government review of their policies on disposal of sewage to sea. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in March that the discharge of raw sewage from coastal towns is to be banned. Over £2 billion is to be spent on additional treatment and £600 million of this will be spent on bathing waters over the next five years.

The Select Committee has also focused on the relationship between risks to health and sea bathing and concluded that the risk of contracting serious disease is minimal. The Government accept that more research is necessary into the risks of contracting minor infections and, with the National Rivers Authority, will fund a continuation of the existing programme.

We also believe that the public should be better informed about bathing water quality. I announced an initiative earlier this year for a voluntary scheme for local authorities to publicise, at the beach or at other prominent sites, up-to-date information on bathing water quality which will be provided by the National Rivers Authority. The local authority associations in England and Wales have endorsed the idea and we are pressing ahead finalising the arrangements for the scheme to be ready for the start of next year's bathing season. A poster is being developed for local display which will give easily understood information on bathing water quality as part of our policy on improved access to environmental information.

Goods and Services

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish tables showing the amount spent on (a) acquiring and (b) commissioning goods and services by his Department in each of the last five years.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 11 December 1990]: Departmental purchasing information systems do not differentiate between acquiring and commissioning goods and services. However, information on departmental purchasing expenditure from 1986-87 is set out in the annual reports of the central unit on purchasing, copies of which are available in the Library.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 11 December 1990]: The information in respect of paid publicity and associated staff costs for my Department, including PSA, is as follows:

	£ million
1985-86	3·5
1986-87	4·2
1987-88	4·8
1988-89	6·9
1989-90	31·5

Expenditure is not broken down between different publicity media.

The increase in expenditure in 1989-90 arises mainly from the flotation of the 10 water plcs, and from specific information campaigns on new legislation on local government finance and housing and to encourage the use of lead-free petrol.

Council Houses

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold (a) nationally and (b) in the London borough of Ealing, in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Tables giving available information on each local authority's sales for each financial year up to June 1990 were laid in the Library on 29 November. The equivalent figures for England are as follows:

Local authority sales and transfers England: (thousands)

	Sales to owner occupiers	Other transfers[1]	Total sales and transfers
1979-80	54	—	54
1980-81	68	—	68
1981-82	128	—	128
1982-83	181	—	181
1983-84	119	3	122
1984-85	91	—	91
1985-86	82	—	82
1986-87	85	1	86
1987-88	103	10	113
1988-89	145	12	156
1989-90	134	14	148
[2]1990-91	27	11	38

[1] To housing associations and private developers.
[2] 1st quarter only.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the cost in income support plus the £10 bonus of payments to employment training trainees in 1988-89 and 1989-90; and what was the average weekly income support and the £10 bonus during each of those two years.

Mr. Jackson: Employment training was launched in September 1988. Expenditure on employment training trainee allowances was £151·7 million in 1988-89, and £527·4 million in 1989-90.

The average allowance per trainee on employment training was approximately £48 per week in 1988-89 and £50 per week in 1989-90.

Youth Training

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of those persons aged 16 and 17 years who are not undertaking a YTS placement.

Mr. Jackson: The latest, mid-1989, estimated total population figure of persons aged 16 and 17 years in Great Britain is 1,552,266. The number of persons in those age groups undertaking a YTS placement in July 1989 was 408,900.

Tourism

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) in what manner his Department intends to input the tourist industry's view into the ongoing review of the poll tax;

(2) what recent representations he has received from the tourist industry on the 100-day rule and bed-and-breakfast accommodation;

(3) what plans there are for amending the 100-day rule within the British tourist industry.

Mr. Forth: Through their frequent contacts, Ministers and officials in the Department ensure that their counterparts at the Department of the Environment (DOE) are kept fully informed of the views of the tourism industry about the community charge and the uniform business rate. This will also apply to the planned comprehensive review of local government finance.

The Department has received many representations, both directly and via the tourist boards, about bed-and-breakfast accommodation and the uniform business rate, all of which have been critical of the "100-day rule". We therefore welcome the DOE's plans to draw up alternative regulations, drawing on the responses to its extensive consultation exercise.

Ports (Accidents)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the fatal accident statistics and serious injury statistics for each employee for the years 1984 onwards for the port of London and each of the Medway ports.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Tenosynovitis

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what research has been conducted by his Department into means of preventing tenosynovitis; and in which industries workers suffer from tenosynovitis;

(2) how many actions for damage to health by tenosynovitis have been initiated in each of the last five years;

(3) what is his estimate of the number of people who suffer from arm or wrist damage from the repetitive work syndrome called tenosynovitis.

Mr. Forth: Tenosynovitis is one of a number of musculo-skeletal disorders affecting the hand and arm which can be brought on by working conditions, particularly by repetitive grasping and twisting performed under time pressures. These upper limb disorders can occur throughout industry and are not specific to particular sectors.

The Health and Safety Executive has recently published a booklet, "Work related upper limb disorders: a guide to prevention", drawing on the following research which it has funded:

"Clinical epidemiological study of relations between upper limb soft tissue disorders and repetitive movements at work". Institute of Occupational Medicine, Edinburgh. Research Report TM/88/19;

"Development of an aid to identifying task elements which may predispose individuals to work related upper limb disorders". Institute of Occupational Medicine, Edinburgh. Research Report TM/90/08;

"Occurrence and mechanism of occupational repetition strain injuries". University of Birmingham. ISBN 070441094X

There are no reliable estimates of the number of workers affected by tenosynovitis. But the first study listed found a 4·8 per cent. incidence of tenosynovitis (21 cases) from a sample of 437 individuals presenting to orthopaedic clinics with upper limb disorders and who had worked during the previous two years.

I regret that information on actions for damage to health by tenosynovitis is not available.

Employment Agencies Act

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of refusals or revocations of licenses granted under the provisions of the Employment Agencies Act 1973 have been on account of (a) a criminal conviction, (b) civil proceedings against the applicant and (c) other grounds of unsuitability.

Mr. Jackson: Of the 55 refusals or revocations of licences (a) 25 were on grounds of criminal convictions (b) one on grounds of civil proceedings and (c) 29 on other grounds of unsuitability.

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many appeals against refusals or revocations of licences under section 4 of the Employment Agencies Act 1973 have been lodged with him since 1973; and with what result.

Mr. Jackson: Since 1976, when the Act came into force, there have been 36 appeals of which eight were successful.

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the actual grounds on which any licences have been refused or revoked under the provisions of the Employment Agencies Act 1973.

Mr. Jackson: The grounds on which licences have been refused or revoked are: convictions for criminal offences, lack of financial probity, civil debt, failure to conduct an employment agency or an employment business properly and unsuitability of the relevant premises.

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on how many occasions in the last 10 years licences granted under the Employment Agencies Act 1973 have been (a) refused or (b) revoked under the provisions of section 3 of that Act.

Mr. Jackson: In the last 10 years, 33 licences have been refused and five licences have been revoked.

Crown Premises

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to replace the system of Crown notices to cover health and safety at work at Crown premises with a regime that incorporates all Crown premises under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act and the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988.

Mr. Forth: Generally the Crown is required to comply with the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, and the relevant statutory provisions, which include the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988. However, the Crown is immune from prosecution, and therefore the arrangements for enforcement are carried out through an alternative system of Crown notices. There are no plans to introduce legislation to change this position.

Disabled People

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with organisations representing disabled people regarding the introduction of rehabilitation leave to encourage employers to retain workers who become disabled.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 11 December 1990]: The Royal National Institute for the Blind told my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State of a proposal that they are developing for rehabilitation leave. His response was that we should like to see employers taking more positive action on addressing the needs of any people who become disabled while in employment and that the employment service can help employers to do this.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 13 December 1990

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list all those whom the registrar of criminal appeals consulted in determining the judges who are to cover the appeal of the six persons convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

The Attorney-General: The allocation of judges to the Court of Appeal criminal division is the responsibility of the Lord Chief Justice. The Lord Chancellor understands that the registrar of criminal appeals consulted the Lord Chief Justice in determining the constitution of the court which will hear the appeals of the six persons convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Law Commissioners

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Government have any proposals to amend the qualification required by a candidate for appointment as a law commissioner in England and Wales.

The Attorney-General: At present, the law governing the appointment of law commissioners in England and Wales requires them to be persons appearing to the Lord Chancellor to be suitably qualified by the holding of the judicial office, or by experience as a barrister or solicitor, or as a teacher of law in a university. The Lord Chancellor now proposes to extend this latter qualification to include teachers of law at institutions other than universities. He intends to make the necessary amendment to the Law Commissions Act 1965 when a suitable legislative opportunity arises.

TRANSPORT

Severn Bridge

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the pattern of debt to the Consolidated Fund in relation to the Severn bridge to assume a downward trend.

Mr. Freeman: If tolls were to continue to be levied under the provisions of the Severn Bridge Tolls Act 1965 the debt should start to reduce during the financial year 1992-93. But under the Severn Bridges Bill, introduced to the House on 27 November 1990, it is proposed to introduce a new financial regime for the present and the new bridge.

Radio-navigation Systems

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in recent discussions with other European nations regarding the introduction of the proposed north-west European Loran C system of radio-navigation; and if he will make a statement on the up-to-date position.

Mr. McLoughlin: The international discussions are still proceeding. No firm agreement has yet been reached.

Antares

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report of the inquiry by the marine accident investigation bureau into the sinking of the Antares; if the report will be made public; and if he will arrange to make a statement on its publication of what action he proposes to take.

Mr. McLoughlin: The marine accident investigation branch investigation into the sinking of the Antares has been given the status of an inspector's inquiry under the Merchant Shipping (Accident Investigation) Regulations. The inquiry involves a very detailed investigation into the circumstances of the accident; and this necessarily takes time to complete. An interim report is expected very shortly. This will assist the Secretary of State in deciding what action needs to be taken. I expect the full report of the chief inspector to be published.

Jubilee Line (Extension)

Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement on the latest position on London Underground's plans for the Jubilee line extension at Westminster.

Mr. Freeman: I am pleased to be able to tell the House that London Underground has now produced a revised design for Westminster station which it believes would better meet the concerns expressed by the House Services Committee. In particular, its new proposal would enable it wholly to avoid using Parliament square as a work site, to reduce the impact upon traffic in the roads surrounding Parliament and to avoid elevated decking in Bridge street. London Underground will shortly be setting out these proposals in a report to the New Buildings Sub-Committee.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the gross domestic product per capita in £ sterling in each of the member nations of the Council of Europe and the Warsaw pact.

Mr. Maples: Estimates of gross domestic product per capita for a number of countries are shown in table 1 of "National Accounts Statistics: Main Aggregates and Detailed Tables, 1987" issued by the United Nations earlier this year. Data are also given in the "World Bank Atlas, 1988". Both publications are available in the Library of the House. For the Warsaw pact economies, the information on economic activity is prepared in accordance with the United Nations system of material product balances which differs from the United Nations system of national accounts used to describe Council of Europe economies.

General Government Expenditure

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing, for the latest years now available, identifiable general Government expenditure by function in England, Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom expressed (a) in cash terms, (b) as a percentage of United Kingdom total identifiable general Government expenditure, (c) as an amount per capita and (d) as an amount per capita expressed as an index, United Kingdom identifiable general Government expenditure = 100.

Mr. Mellor: Most public expenditure is planned on a national basis and there is no geographical disaggregation apart from expenditure which is the responsibility of the territorial Departments. However, in order to provide a more comprehensive breakdown of public expenditure within the four countries of the United Kingdom an additional analysis, covering outturn years, is carried out each year. This analysis allocates, where possible, general Government expenditure to England, Scotland, Wales or Northern Ireland and, therefore, includes within the territories a wider coverage of expenditure than that for which the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland are directly responsible.

The analysis divides spending into "identifiable" and "non-identifiable" expenditure. The term "identifiable expenditure" refers to expenditure that can be identified from official records as having been incurred for the benefit of people in a particular country. The coverage of identifiable expenditure has been changed since last year's exercise to produce a greater consistency of treatment between different types of expenditure. In the following analyses of territorial spending all expenditure on common services—for example, revenue and tax collection, financial administration—has been treated as unidentifiable. In previous years this category of expenditure was not treated in a consistent manner. This change reduces identifiable expenditure by around £3 billion—2 per cent. —but does not appreciably affect the index of per capita expenditure between territories. Unidentifiable expenditure mainly consists of expenditure deemed to have been incurred on behalf of the United Kingdom as a whole, for example, defence, overseas aid and other overseas services and common services. It also covers expenditure which cannot readily be divided between territories from existing departmental records.

Tables 1 to 5 show figures for identifiable general Government expenditure according to main function in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland in the years 1985-86 to 1989-90. The tables show identifiable general Government expenditure in each territory in total and on a per capita basis. The per capita figures are based on mid-year population estimates. Figures for earlier years are not available on a totally consistent basis with those given in these tables.

Table 6 compares expenditure by function in the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland programmes in 1989-90 with the total identifiable expenditure in the respective countries. It shows that identifiable expenditure has a wider coverage than expenditure within the responsibilities of the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales; in the case of Northern Ireland it has a slightly wider coverage than the Northern Ireland programme. The table also shows, for 1989-90, unidentifiable expenditure where this can be allocated to function.

In some cases, expenditure which cannot be separately identified for England, Scotland or Wales can be allocated to Great Britain rather than to the United Kingdom; for example, the majority of the finance provided for expenditure by the nationalised industries can be allocated to Great Britain. Tables 7a and 7b compare Northern Ireland allocated expenditure with that allocated to Great Britain over the five-year period.

The extent to which expenditure can be identified may vary from year to year and between countries The coverage of particular functions can also vary between countries; for example, in Northern Ireland, expenditure on arts and libraries is contained in the education category.

The terms and definitions used for this analysis are the same as those used for the recent autumn statement—Cm. 1311—but the figures are based on less up-to-date outturn information.

[1] Items included in general government expenditure but not included within total expenditure on programmes (privatisation proceeds, general government debt interest and accounting adjustments) are treated as unidentified expenditure and not allocated to territories.
[2] Programmes 15, 16 and 17 relate to expenditure programmes in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland covered by the respective chapters of the 1990 public expenditure White Paper (Cm 1015-1017).
[3] Responsibility for most expenditure in Northern Ireland rests with the Northern Ireland Office and Departments; this column includes certain expenditure in support of the agriculture and fishing industries, the costs of the Northern Ireland Court Service and War Pensions payments.
[4] Includes £305 million for costs associated with the privatisation of Short Brothers plc.
[5] Expenditure on arts and libraries in Northern Ireland is included with education and science.
[6] Includes contributions to European Communities and expenditure associated with general maintenance of government, such as tax collection and population registration.

Advertising

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent in each of the last five years by his Department on (a) advertising in the press, (b) advertising on television and radio, (c) other advertising and promotion and (d) promotion videos and sound cassettes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 11 December 1990]: Expenditure by the Treasury on promotional advertising is as follows:

1988-89 (Actual)	1989-90 (Actual)	1990-91 (Budget/ Provision)
£49,310	£52,568	£52,800

Notes:
[1] Figures for 1986-87 and 1987-88 are not readily available and could be given only at disproportionate cost.
[2] None of the expenditure shown in the table is for television or radio advertising.

Income Tax

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the change in Treasury income during the 1991-92 financial year resulting from confining all income tax exemptions to an upper limit of 20 per cent.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 10 December 1990]: It is estimated that at 1991-92 levels of income the revenue yield in a full year from restricting income tax reliefs to an upper limit of 20 per cent. of gross income less personal allowances would be about £2¼ billion and some 6½ million taxpayers, of whom almost all currently pay at the basic rate, would pay more tax. These estimates are based on projections from the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes and are therefore provisional. They are based on an increase in personal allowances and the basic rate threshold of 10¼ per cent. in 1991-92 in line with the illustrative rates published in the 1990 autumn statement and do not take account of any behavioural changes that might result from the new regime.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of adults in each standard region together with the number of persons liable for the payment of poll tax at (a) the minimum rate, (b) a reduced rate and (c) the full rate.

Mr. Key: The available information is as follows:

Thousands

Standard Region	Latest OPCS estimate of resident population June 1989	Number on Community Charges Register on 10 September 1990 subject to a personal charge on
		1 June 1990 Students	10 September 1990 Others[1]

Greater London	5,246	93	5,078

[1]including full year equivalent of number contributing to collective community charge in 1990-91.

The difference between the OPCS figures, which are estimates based on the 1981 population census, and the numbers on the registers subject to a personal community charge may not equal the number of exemptions due to the different sources used to derive the figures and the different reference dates used.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review his decision not to take account of the use of balances to support revenue expenditure in 1990-91 in making his decisions on poll tax capping in 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: As I told the House on 3 December, the intentions for criteria announced on 31 October remain the Government's intended criteria for 1991-92. When my right hon. Friend comes to make his decisions on capping he will take into account all appropriate considerations.

Small Cetaceans

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to adhere to the conditions of the Berne convention by protecting the habitat of small cetaceans, and in particular the dolphin populations in the Moray firth and Cardigan bay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Government fulfil their obligations under the Berne convention principally through the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. The 1981 Act, as subsequently amended, prohibits the deliberate killing, injuring or taking of all small cetacean species.

The Government's strategy for protection of the marine environment was set out in the environment White Paper —Cm. 1200. In accordance with the wildlife initiatives agreed in the ministerial declaration of the third North sea conference in March this year, new research is being commissioned to improve knowledge of cetacean behaviour and to analyse tissue samples from stranded animals. Good progress is also being made on the preparation of an agreement on the conservation of small cetaceans in the Baltic and North seas under the Bonn convention on migratory species.

Homelessness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of homeless persons aged 16 and 17 years.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities report the number of households for whom they accept responsibility to secure accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985. Information on age is not collected and the Department has no such estimates.

The Mall

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when The Mall in London SW1 was first closed to traffic on Sundays; and what arrangements have been made since then to facilitate the flow of traffic which has to use other roads.

Mr. Trippier: The Mall was first closed to motor traffic on Sundays on 28 July 1968 for an experimental period. The arrangement was made permanent in April 1969 and extended to include the Queen Victoria memorial roundabout and Constitution hill. The Department has made no special arrangements for traffic flow on other roads in the royal parks.

Wheelchair and Mobility Housing

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the level of provision of wheelchair and mobility housing over the last 10 years.

Sir George Young: The figures for housing association and local authority wheelchair and mobility dwellings are shown in the table. Since October 1987, housing associations have been required to construct all new-build housing and rehabilitation schemes to mobility standards, wherever practicable. In addition, disabled people may obtain assistance for house adaptations under the new house renovation grants system introduced in the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 and this should help to increase the amount of housing suitable for people with disabilities. Local authorities' spending on home improvement grants for works to disabled persons' dwellings in England, increased from £2·547 million in 1980-81 to £51·549 million in 1988-89.

Aggregates

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what progress has been made on the revised guidelines for aggregates provision in England and Wales; and when they will be published for public consideration;

(2) if he will allow an opportunity for additional public consultation on a range of options for future aggregates provision before the regional aggregates working parties have finalised their commentaries on future supply requirements;

(3) if he will make it his policy to include reference to the fact that the demand for aggregates is not immutable in his revision of the guidelines for aggregates provision in England and Wales.

Mr. Yeo: Following the completion of the 1989 survey into aggregates production, sales and distribution my right hon. Friend proposes to revise "Guidelines for the Provision of Aggregates in England and Wales", MPG6. The survey will be published in the new year, together with a forecast of the future demand for primary aggregates. The implications of this will be discussed by the regional aggregates working parties during 1991. In particular they will consider the relevance of the forecast for the region, the land use planning implications and how future demand might be met.

Before publishing a revision of the present "Guidelines for the Provision of Aggregates in England and Wales", MPG6, my right hon. Friend will consider the views of the regional aggregates working parties, together with any other views which may be expressed. It is not intended to undertake a wider range of formal consultations until a draft of the revised guidelines is available, but my right hon. Friend will make available the information given to the regional aggregates working parties and will consider any views that may be expressed about the future demand for aggregates before publishing the draft revised guidelines for full public consultation towards the end of 1991.

In considering future guidelines for aggregates provision, it will be important to consider a range of options. This will include the likely demand for aggregates and the extent to which use may be made of secondary materials such as colliery minestone and china clay sand as well as waste and recycled materials including power station ash, blast furnace slag and crushed concrete. Also to be taken into account will be the potential offered by marine sand and gravel and imports from outside England and Wales. My Department already has a number of research projects in hand to examine these options and the results will be important in the preparation of new guidelines.

It remains important that the minerals planning authorities should continue to implement the advice given in MPG6 which remains the current guidance on aggregates provision.

Building Surveyors

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the present status of professional liability in relation to building surveyors.

Sir George Young: The professional liability of building surveyors, as of other construction professionals, is dealt with under common law, contract law and such Acts as the Latent Damage Act 1986.

Housing Investment Programmes

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will make the allocations to local authorities in England for their housing investment programmes in 1991-92.

Sir George Young: Each housing authority is today being informed of its housing investment programme—HIP—allocation for 1991-92. Copies of the letters to local authorities and of the schedule of HIP allocations have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The local authority associations have been consulted about the distribution of housing capital allocations, including the construction of the generalised needs index —GNI—which has been further updated for 1991-92 following the comprehensive review last year. In particular, we have this year introduced a new indicator into the GNI to measure authorities' use of temporary accommodation. This helps to ensure that those authorities that face the most severe homelessness problems and that have had to meet them by using temporary accommodation receive additional resources to reflect their needs.

Local authority credit approvals and specified capital grant total £1,972 million in 1991-92. There are also £7 million of other capital grants. The Local Government and Housing Act 1989 allows my right hon. Friend to take account of local authorities' capital receipts when making allocations, and the housing element of the receipts taken into account in this way is £276 million. Housing capital allocations for 1991-92 will therefore total £2,255 million.

After considering the views of the local authority associations, my right hon. Friend has concluded that the distribution of resources should be made on the following basis:

(i) £387 million to be allocated separately as supplementary credit approvals as follows:

(a) £115 million for the second year of the special homelessness initiative; local authorities in London and the south-east will shortly be invited to submit bids, particularly to bring empty homes back into use and for cash incentive schemes;

(b) £185 million of the total of £290 million available for the Estate Action programme, for new and some continuation schemes. In 1990-91, the HIP allocation of the 57 urban programme authorities included additional resources in the form of inner city special allocations. For 1991-92, my right hon. Friend has decided that these resources can be used more effectively if allocated as part of an enlarged Estate Action programme;

(c) £50 million for the new rural housing programme;

(d) £10 million for energy efficiency demonstration projects in the local authority stock;

(e) £25 million to provide against demand for mandatory grants in excess of authorities' available resources;

(f) £2 million to cover repairs to defective ex new town stock;

(ii) In addition to the £185 million of supplementary credit approvals for Estate Action, a further £105 million of annual capital guidelines—ACGs—for Estate Action continuation schemes is being allocated to authorities on the basis of agreed levels of commitment, as part of their main HIP allocations;

(iii) The remaining £1,756 million of the main HIP allocations, made up of the £1,343 million of housing ACGs and £413 million of resources for specified capital grant, has been distributed in two stages. First, the distribution to DOE regions has been made in proportion to the sum of the GNI scores of the local authorities in each region. Second, each region's total has been allocated to individual local authorities one half in proportion to each authority's GNI score, and one half following recommendations by the Department's regional housing controllers to reflect local needs and circumstances.

Under the new capital finance system, the Government issue forward indications of all-service annual capital guidelines for the second and third years of the public expenditure survey period. The indications for 1992-93 and 1993-94 will be issued as early as possible in the new year. However, to assist authorities in planning their housing investment programmes more than one year ahead, my right hon. Friend has decided to promulgate provisional figures for the housing element of the overall calculation with authorities' HIP allocations. The amounts for 1992-93 and 1993-94 are included in each authority's allocation letter.

Pollution

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress made to date on implementing the provisions of the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989; what regulations have been laid; and what regulations he expects to lay arising from the Act.

Mr. Baldry [pursuant to the reply, 14 November 1990, c. 163]: We have today published a consultation paper which sets out the basis on which we propose to implement the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989. The consultation paper includes a draft of the regulations necessary to give effect to the registration of waste carriers and the procedure under which a waste regulation authority may seize a vehicle used for fly-tipping.

The registration of waste carriers is the first step in the implementation of the duty of care now contained in section 34 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The main features of the system of registration which we propose to adopt are:

(a) Scope: The effect of the 1989 Act is to require anyone who transports waste in the course of a business, or in any other way for profit, to be registered. The proposed regulations will require each waste regulation authority to establish and maintain a register of carriers. Each carrier will be required to register with the authority for the area in which his principal place of business is situated. On acceptance, his registration will be valid throughout Great Britain;

(b) Duration: Each carrier's registration will last for three years. He will be reminded by the regulation authority of the need to apply for renewal of his registration;

(c) Refusal: A regulation authority will be able to refuse or revoke registration if the carrier or another relevant person has been convicted of a prescribed offence and, in the authority's opinion, it is undesirable for the carrier to be authorised to transport controlled waste. The draft regulations list the offences which we propose to prescribe. A carrier will have the right of appeal against an authority's refusal or revocation of his registration;

(d) Exemptions: Certain types of carrier will be exempted from the requirement to register. For example, producers in relation to the transport of waste which they have produced;

(e) Charges: Regulation authorities will be required to charge for their consideration of applications for registration and its renewal. The consultation paper invites comments on the level at which the charges should be set;

(f) The register: The registers maintained by regulation authorities will contain each carrier's application and entries listing other relevant information. Registers will be open to inspection free of charge by members of the public and must be indexed to enable information to be readily traced;

(g) Timetable: The 1989 Act and the proposed regulations will be brought into force in two stages. The first stage will come into force in May 1991 and will enable carriers to apply for registration. It is proposed that the second stage should come into force at the same time as the duty of care in April 1992. At that stage, it will become an offence to transport waste without registering and a carrier may be stopped and required to produce his certificate of registration.

The draft regulations also set out the procedure under which an authority will be able to apply for a warrant to seize a vehicle believed to have been used in the illegal disposal of waste. The purpose of this procedure is to aid the detection and prosecution of those involved in fly-tipping. It is not concerned with the punitive confiscation of vehicles. An authority will be required to return a vehicle to a claimant who satisfactorily establishes his entitlement to it. However, once the authority has established that person's entitlement it will be considerably better placed to ascertain the identity of the person using the vehicle when the waste was disposed of illegally.

Comments on the draft regulations are invited by 28 February 1991. I am arranging for copies of the consultation paper to be placed in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

Trent Regional Health Authority

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the projected figure for the closure of acute medical and surgical beds in the Trent regional health authority by March 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to Sir Michael Carlisle, the chairman of Trent regional health authority, for this information.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing staff have been made redundant or redeployed; how many support staff have been made redundant; how many full-time posts have been converted to part-time posts; and what increase in administrative jobs there have been with the introduction of the health Bill in the Trent regional health authority last year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The provisional figure for administration and clerical staff, including general and senior managers, for Trent region for September 1990 shows an increase of 750 whole-time equivalents. It is not known centrally what proportion of these posts relates to the implementation of the Government's White Paper "Working for \Patients". The remaining information requested is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to Sir Michael Carlisle, the chairman of Trent regional health authority, for further information.

Young Offenders

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to increase the level of financial support to secure units for young offenders in Merseyside.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The provision of secure accommodation for children in care, including those who are offenders or alleged offenders, is a matter for individual local authorities. We are always prepared to consider applications for grant aid to fund the capital provision of new secure units where the need for such provision has been identified. We are not aware of current plans to increase the stock of secure accommodation in Merseyside, although we understand local authorities within that region are reviewing the position.

Myodil

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if Myodil still has a product licence for export; and what information he has on whether Glaxo is still exporting it.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: For medicinal products exported from the United Kingdom the requirements are set by the importing country. A product licence is not always required for exports.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when Myodil was given a reviewed product licence; on what subsequent dates was the licence renewed; what evidence was presented at the time the reviewed licence was given; and what consideration was given to adverse reactions to Myodil;

(2) what clinical trials have been carried out on Myodil.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A review application for Myodil was received in the early 1980s. Numerous clinical trials have been conducted with Myodil, examining its value in a number of diagnostic procedures including myelography and ventriculography. A substantial body of evidence in relation to iophendylate, the active ingredient of Myodil, has been published in well over 300 citations spanning a period of over 40 years. This included information relating to adverse reactions associated with the use of Myodil.

The review included examination of evidence that the product was of an appropriate standard of safety, quality and efficacy. A reviewed product licence, valid for five years, was granted in 1987.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) in what ways were the warnings regarding the use of Myodil drawn to the attention of doctors; and whether any steps were taken by his Department or by health authorities to ensure that no doctor giving a spinal injection of Myodil could be unaware of them;

(2) whether his Department, the Committee on Safety of Medicines or the Committee on the Review of Medicines ever issued warnings to radiologists about adverse reactions to Myodil.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I know of no warnings being issued by the Department, health authorities, the Committee on Safety of Medicines or the Committee on the Review of Medicines to radiologists about adverse reaction to Myodil. Information was already available to them in package inserts and the data sheet which were updated as appropriate in the light of accumulating knowledge. It is for doctors who use a product to ensure that they are fully familiar with the benefits and the risks of any procedure or treatment.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what precise warnings regarding the use of Myodil and the possibility of subsequent adverse reactions were given by the manufacturer, Glaxo; what changes there have been in the warnings; and when they were made.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the package insert dated March 1972, serious adverse reactions were reported to be rare provided that a suitable technique was used; references were made to the removal of Myodil after myelography. The reactions listed included frequent headaches, sometimes severe with vomiting and photophobia after myelography, pyrexia, neck stiffness, low back pain and exacerbation of previous symptoms such as those of sciatica. The leaflet also referred to occasional reports of arachnoiditis and literature reports of adhesions and fibrous exudates being found on operation in patients who had at some stage undergone myelography with Myodil.

In the revised package insert dated November 1973 it was, in addition, recommended that the material be removed by aspiration after the myelography unless required for further study. Information on adverse reactions was enlarged to detail its irritant or allergenic potential. Advice was given that if low back pain persisted or previous symptoms of sciatica were exacerbated, any residual Myodil should be removed and where warranted, hydrocortisone sodium succinate injected intrathecally.

The data sheets introduced in the 1980s further emphasised the importance of removing as much Myodil as possible at the time of myelography.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the approximate number of people who have developed arachnoiditis after the use of Myodil.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Myelography is often a prelude to surgery for lumbar disc disease. In consequence, it is difficult to disassociate the effects of the original disease from those of the pre-operative myelography or the surgery. The frequency of symptoms compatible with arachnoiditis varies in different publications and it is clear that there is a poor correlation between symptoms and pathology. For these reasons, it is not possible to estimate the number of people who may have developed arachnoiditis as a result of the use of Myodil.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) in the last full year it was available, how many spinal investigations using Myodil were carried out in national health service hospitals;

(2) what information he has regarding the approximate number of people who have been injected with the spinal dye Myodil since it was marketed to its withdrawal.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the types of spinal investigations for which Myodil was used.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Myodil was used for the following spinal investigations:

(a) Investigation of low back pain.
(b) Investigation of cervical, dorsal and lumbar disc disease and
(c) Investigation of suspected compressive abnormalities of the spinal canal.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health from what sources his Department has received information about adverse reactions to the spinal dye Myodil.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has received information on adverse reactions to Myodil from a variety of sources including spontaneous reports from the medical profession, published literature and from the manufacturer.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many yellow card reports there have been indicating a possible association between the spinal dye Myodil and the disease arachnoiditis; and when the first report was received;

(2) if he will list the adverse reactions associated with the spinal dye Myodil.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Committee on Safety of Medicines has received a total of 73 yellow card reports in association with the use of Myodil, the first one being in 1970. Arachnoiditis was mentioned in 11 reports, the first in March 1972. In addition to arachnoiditis, the reports have included meningeal reactions which were self-limiting in most cases and local reactions either due to the procedure or the dye such as lumbar pain and leg pain. It is important to stress that the report of a reaction suspected in association with the use of a drug does not necessarily imply a cause and effect relationship.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to withdraw the product licence for Myodil.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Myodil was withdrawn from the market by the company for commercial reasons and the Licensing Authority has been notified of its action. There are no plans to withdraw the product licence for Myodil.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health at what date alternatives to Myodil were first available; what they were; and what assessment was made of the degree to which they were risk free.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Myodil was licensed with the following clinical indications:

Myelography
Ventriculography:
visualisation of the third and fourth ventricles and the aqueduct of sylvius.
Intra-uterine use:
to outline the foetus prior to intra-uterine blood transfusion.

The following is a list of products which are licensed for one or more of the same indications:

Isovist 190
Isovist 240
Isovist 300
Niopam 200 Injection
Niopam 300 Injection
Omnipaque 180 mgi/ml Injection
Amipaque Powder for Injection
Iopamidol 300 Injection

The availability of any particular drug is a matter for the companies concerned.

Every application for a product licence is considered individually and must satisfy the Licensing Authority as to its safety, quality and efficacy before a licence is granted.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedures for spinal investigation have been used following the withdrawal of Myodil; and what is their cost relative to Myodil.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The procedures listed have been used for spinal investigations following the withdrawal from use of Myodil:

(a) the use of water-soluble contrast media.
(b) Computed tomography without and with contrast media and
(c) Magnetic resonance imaging.

No costings are available relative to that of using Myodil.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether the Committee on Safety of Medicines has at any time discussed Myodil;

(2) whether any evidence on safety has been presented to the Committee on the Review of Medicines since Myodil was first given its reviewed product licence.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Following completion of the review, it would be the Committee on Safety of Medicines rather than the Committee on the Review of Medicines which would be consulted if the known safety profile of a product changed so as to cause alarm. This has not been the case with Myodil.

Non-pasteurised Milk

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment his Department has made on the health implications of the consumption of non-pasteurised milk; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has regarding incidents of illness or disease in England and Wales in the last 10 years which can be attributed to the consumption of non-pasteurised milk.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department keeps under continual review the health implications arising from the consumption of untreated milk in the light of the incidence of human illness associated with it. Since 1985, the retail outlets through which untreated milk can be sold in England and Wales have been severely restricted. There was a public consultation in 1989 on whether a total ban on the sale of untreated milk should be introduced. In view of the strong response from consumers who wished to continue to drink untreated milk, the Government decided not to proceed with the ban but to introduce new testing and labelling requirements to ensure that risks to health are minimised and to enable consumers to make an informed choice on whether to drink this product. New test requirements on microbiological examination were introduced on 1 April 1990 and from 1 September 1990 all such milk has been required to carry a clear warning

"This milk has not been heat-treated and may therefore contain organisms harmful to health".

This enables consumers to make an informed decision on whether to use the product.

In the period 1980 to 1989, there were 112 confirmed outbreaks, accounting for 2,776 cases, of food-borne diseases associated with raw cows' milk reported to the public health laboratory service's communicable disease surveillance centre.

NHS Employees

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has completed consideration of the case for further guidance to be issued to national health service employees with private practice interests in potential competition with their work in income-generating departments in the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Officials are currently working on guidance on conflict of interests to be issued to national health service authorities in due course.

Pressure Sores

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his most up-to-date estimate of the cost to the national health service of treating a pressure sore.

Mr. Dorrell: No specific figures or sufficiently detailed data on which to base a realistic estimate are collected centrally.

Organ Donors

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any financial assistance is provided to the next of kin of organ donors for the cost of the subsequent funeral arrangements.

Mr. Dorrell: No.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has concerning the total cost of removing a range of organs from a donor whose next of kin has consented to organ donations; how many transplant teams will be involved; and what is the approximate time an operating theatre will be required.

Mr. Dorrell: The resources required to remove organs depend on a number of factors such as the donor's medical condition. We are currently considering the possibility of identifying the costs incurred in organ donation.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many neuro-intensive care units in England and Wales are involved in transplantation; and how many have produced organ donors in the past five years, unit by unit.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally in the form requested.

Gloucester District Health Authority

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the size of population served by Gloucester district health authority in 1979 and 1990, and the proportion of the population aged over 60 years in 1979 and 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: The estimated resident population of Gloucester district health authority at mid-1989, the latest date for which an estimate is available, is 315,800 of whom 21·1 per cent. are aged 60 and over. The estimated population for the same area at mid-1979 is 297,600, of whom 19·3 per cent. were aged 60 and over.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by category the number of staff employed by the Gloucester district health authority (a) in 1979 and (b) in 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows the figures for 1982 and 1989.

Due to the reorganisation of health authority boundaries in 1982, information on the number of staff employed by health authorities in Gloucestershire prior to this date is not comparable with later years. The hon. Member may wish to write to Ms. R. Frichie, the chairman of Gloucester health authority, for information in 1990, which is not held centrally.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide the number of hospital beds available in the Gloucester district health authority area in 1979 and 1990 and the projected total for 1992.

Mr. Dorrell: Between 1979 and 1989-90, the average daily number of beds in national health service hospitals in Gloucester district health authority, taking boundary changes into account, reduced from 2,192 to 1,664. Over the period 1979 to 1989-90 the total number of in-patient discharges and deaths and day case attendances rose by 26 per cent. from 33,000 to 42,000.

The hon. Member may wish to write to Ms. R. Frichie, the chairman of Gloucester health authority, for estimates for 1992 which are not held centrally.

Feline Immunodeficiency Virus

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the extent of FIV infection in cats and the potential threat to human health.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

Feline immunodeficiency virus—FIV—has been identified in cat populations in numerous countries, but it is most prevalent in free-roaming cats. Most cats recover from the disease but become lifelong carriers of the virus. The infection rate in the limited surveys that have taken place in the United Kingdom has ranged from 5 to 23 per cent. of the cats tested. There is no evidence to link FIV to any human disease.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Welfare

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those husbandry systems he described as unacceptable in his answer to the hon. Member for Calder Valley (Mr. Thompson) of 25 July, Official Report, column 251.

Mr. Maclean: The systems were described in the Farm Animal Welfare Council's assessment of pig production systems. The council drew attention in particular to the welfare problems with stall and tether systems for dry sows, the "sweat box" system for keeping growing pigs and multi-tier cages for weaners.

Expert Advisory Committees

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will now establish a register of interests for members of Government expert advisory committees.

Mr. Maclean: The interests which members of the Veterinary Products Committee have in the pharmaceutical industry are published each year in its annual report of which copies are in the Library. Independent members of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides are currently appointed on the basis that they have no interests in the pesticides industry. But in order to widen the pool of expertise available we are now considering replacing this restriction by the introduction of a system based on a register of declared interests. We are considering this issue in relation to other committees advising on food safety matters, but have not reached a conclusion.

Food Surveillance

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure a consumer representative sits on the steering group on food surveillance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The steering group on food surveillance advises the Government on the detailed scientific aspects of their food chemical surveillance work. The members of the group are experts who are individually qualified to contribute to this work. Specific consumer protection issues which arise are considered by the Food Advisory Committee which has consumer representatives amongst its members.

Farmers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which specific EEC regulations exist to allow the provision of financial assistance to farmers adversely affected by structural changes.

Mr. Curry: Council regulation 797/85, as amended by Council regulations 3827/85, 2224/86, 1760/87, 1094/88, 1137/88, 591/89, 1609/89, 3808/89, 752/90 and 2176/90 and Commission regulation 2156/89, covers a wide range of structural measures available to farmers generally. Regulations 1696/71, 1035/72, and 1360/78, 389/82 and 1096/88, all of which were also amended by regulation 3808/89, deal with structural measures which are specific to particular sectors or countries other than the United Kingdom. In addition, there is a specific income aids scheme covered by Council regulations 768/89 and 3813/89 as amended by regulation 1279/90.

Seals and Dolphins

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to prevent the disappearance of seal and dolphins from United Kingdom waters.

Mr. Curry: Seals are given basic protection against indiscriminate killing by the Conservation of Seals Act 1970. The Government have by order extended this safeguard in the wake of the recent viral epidemic which in particular has affected the common seal. The United Kingdom populations of seals number over 100,000.

Dolphins are protected against deliberate capture by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and the Whaling Industry (Regulation) Act 1934. A United Kingdom initiative led to the adoption by the North sea conference forum earlier this year of a plan concerned with conservation of all species of small cetacean.

Food Industry

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to encourage the food industry to reduce the levels of sugar in foods.

Mr. Curry: Following the recommendations of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy report on dietary sugars and human disease and the advice contained in the recent Government publication "Eight Guidelines for a Healthy Diet", both of which are available in the Library of the House, the food industry is responding to consumers' demand by providing a wide and increasing range of less sugary foods. We are continuing to encourage the declaration of total sugars as part of nutrition declarations which now commonly appear on food labels so that consumers can make informed choices.

Irish sea

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for which countries the Hague preference applies in the Irish sea; if he will apply to have the Hague preference extended to Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement about fish quotas in the Irish sea for 1991.

Mr. Curry: The Hague preference areas are the northern parts of the United Kingdom which includes Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. In the Irish sea, Hague preference is provided for cod, whiting, plaice and sole for both countries but for each of these the trigger point for the preference is higher for the Republic of Ireland.

The Commission's proposals for TACs and quotas for 1991 for the Irish sea which are set out in an un-numbered explanatory memorandum of 11 December, will be considered by the Council of Fisheries Ministers on 19 December. Under these proposals if they were to be agreed unchanged the Republic of Ireland could invoke Hague preference for cod, whiting and plaice.

Mink

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in each of the last three years his inspectors have supervised, examined or monitored the slaughter of farmed mink by injection.

Mr. Maclean: Officers of the state veterinary service monitored the slaughter of mink by injection once in 1988 and once in 1989. At the visits to fur farms so far in 1990, at which slaughter was observed on four occasions, the method used was gassing rather than injection.

Slaughter

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 316, how he ensures that slaughter of livestock other than in a licensed abattoir is carried out with due care and humanity.

Mr. Maclean: On-farm slaughter is an unpredictable event and, as such, cannot be routinely monitored. Officers of the state veterinary service are available to advise on humane slaughter to ensure that livestock owners are able to meet their legal obligations.

Soil Erosion

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department will initiate research into the extent to which soil erosion contributes to the deposition of phosphates in water courses.

Mr. Curry: This Department is currently reviewing the need for further research into this matter.

Soil Survey and Land Research Centre

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reductions in funding and staffing of the Soil Survey are proposed for 1990-91.

Mr. Curry: No reduction in funding of the Soil Survey and Land Research Centre has taken place in 1990-91. In the current financial year the Department will be spending £552,800 on research at the Soil Survey and Land Research Centre. Changes in staffing arrangements are regarded as an internal matter to be handled solely by the Soil Survey and Land Research Centre's management.

Water Erosion

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if a report on the 1989-90 water erosion monitoring scheme will be published;

(2) if he proposes to continue his Department's water erosion monitoring scheme in 1991.

Mr. Curry: The research project into the control of water erosion in arable crops, began in 1988-89 and the first year's work is being evaluated. The project is due for review in 1992, when the results will be published.

Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the result of the laboratory test for spongiform encephalopathy carried out on the antelope calf which died at London zoo on 12 November.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1990, c. 441]: The examination of the brain tissue of the greater kudu put down at London zoo on 13 November has been carried out by the central veterinary laboratory and a spongiform encephalopathy has been confirmed.

The animal was born in April 1989 and was the offspring of a greater kudu in which a similar encephalopathy was confirmed in August 1989. Investigations into the cause of the disease in this kudu are continuing.

Pentobarbitone

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations govern the use of pentobarbitone; and what restrictions are placed on its purchase, ownership and use.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

Pentobarbitone is a barbiturate compound which is used as a sedative and anaesthetic in clinical and veterinary practice. It is used particularly in the killing and putting down of animals. Supply and possession of the drug are subject to restrictions under both the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 and the Medicines Act 1968. The effect is that it may be purchased for professional use by medical, dental and veterinary practitioners and by others against a prescription issued by a practitioner; and any person may lawfully possess the drug for medical, dental or veterinary purposes in accordance with the directions of a practitioner. Under the Misuse of Drugs Act, the unlawful possession of pentobarbitone is punishable, on indictment, by up to five years' imprisonment or a fine—or both.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Vietnam (Aid)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the restrictions on aid to Vietnam; and if he has proposals to lift them.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government have no direct aid programme for Vietnam and no immediate plans to begin one. However, I am keeping this question under review. We provide financial support to British non-governmental organisations for projects in Vietnam through our joint funding scheme, under which we meet 50 per cent. of costs, and through a special scheme for two northern provinces of Vietnam from which most of the boat people came, under which the Overseas Development Administration meets 80 per cent. of costs. The European Community is now preparing to provide reintegration assistance for boat people returnees and the Goverment will contribute to the cost.

Southern Africa

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid each OECD donor has given to the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference and for which Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference programme since 1985.

Mrs. Chalker: Full details of other donors' assistance to the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference is not readily available. Net official development assistance from OECD donors to the member states of the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference from 1985 to 1988, the last year for which figures are available, is as set out in the tables.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the EC has given to SADCC since 1985; and for which programmes.

Mrs. Chalker: SADCC's allocation under the sixth European development fund—1985-1990—is 141 mecu (about £99 million). Sixty-nine mecu of this has been committed so far, to the following projects:

Karonga-Ibanda Road
Beira Port Rehabilitation
Tazama Pipeline Rehabilitation
Land/Water Management Training Centre
Mananga Agricultural Management Training
Inchope-Machipanda Road

In addition SADCC member countries were allocated a total of 776 mecu—about £543 million—in their EDF VI national indicative programmes. Under the seventh European development fund—1990-1995—SADCC has received an initial allocation of 121 mecu—about £85 million—to be focused mainly on transport, food and agriculture and SADCC member countries have been allocated a total of a further 1,007 mecu—£705 million—in their national indicative programmes.

Poland

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all aid currently being given by the United Kingdom to Poland.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 10 December at column 281.

UNRWA

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much Her Majesty's Government have donated to the work of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The amounts are as follows:

	£ million
1979	4·4
1980	4·5
1981	5·0
1982	5·0
1983	5·0

[1] Includes a total of £1·25 million earmarked for Lebanon.
[2] Includes a total of £263,000 for a feasibility study commissioned by UNRWA from Llewelyn-Davies Planning Limited.

Kurdish Refugees

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid Her Majesty's Government have provided to Kurdish refugees for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: As I informed the House on 2 April at column 415, the Government have provided two grants totalling £550,000 to assist Iraqi Kurds in Turkey and ethnic Turkish refugees from Bulgaria. The first grant of £250,000 was made in November 1988 and the second of £300,000 in July 1989. Both grants were provided through the Turkish Red Crescent Society. There have been no further developments.

Lebanon

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid Her Majesty's Government have provided to Palestinian and other local refugees in Lebanon for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The humanitarian assistance that we have provided is as follows:

A proportion of the United Kingdom annual contribution to UNRWA's general programmes is also spent in Lebanon. Details of that spending are, I regret, unavailable.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Leaflets

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were his reasons for producing the leaflet, "Get It Right Before You Go"; and whether a request for such a leaflet was received from consumer or tourist groups.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The "Get It Right Before You Go" leaflets are a Foreign and Commonwealth Office initiative. They aim to improve understanding of what consuls can do and to encourage self-help, including adequate insurance and safeguarding of money, passports and tickets by British holidaymakers in order to reduce common, avoidable problems.

Reducing the pressure on consular staff overseas enables them to respond quickly and comprehensively to British nationals needing help in real emergencies.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated annual cost of producing the consular leaflet, "Get It Right Before You Go".

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Design and printing costs for the new leaflet "Checklist for Travellers—Get It Right Before You Go" will be £28,000. Additionally, the Post Office's charges for distributing the leaflet with the estimated 2·2 million new British visitor's passports issued annually will be £132,000.

Reprint and distribution costs for the original leaflet "Consular Assistance Abroad—Get It Right Before You Go", mainly issued through travel agents, are around £20,000.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether consular services abroad are described in leaflets or documents available from his Department other than in the leaflet, "Get It Right Before You Go".

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are two "Get It Right Before You Go" leaflets: "Consular Assistance Abroad" and "Checklist for Travellers" and both give general travel advice. The former also explains what a consul can and cannot do for a Briton in trouble abroad, while the latter concentrates on a few key messages, including adequate insurance and safeguarding valuables.

Consular services abroad are also described in the annual review of consular work, but this is not targeted at British holidaymakers and does not include travel guidance.

South Atlantic Fisheries

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to impose a 12-mile fishing limit around South Georgia.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The extension of the territorial sea of South Georgia to 12 nautical miles came into effect on 1 January 1990.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of the agreements signed with other nations to fish in the south Atlantic.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There are no agreements to fish in the south Atlantic between the United Kingdom or its dependent territories and other states. Some agreements have, however, been signed between the Governments of certain dependent territories and private fishing companies or associations.

In addition there are European Community agreements, entered into on behalf of all member states, which have been signed with Angola, Cape Verde, Gambia, Guinea Bissau, Guinea Conakry, Guinea Equatorial, Ivory Coast, Sao Tome and Principle, and Senegal. Copies of proposals for these agreements will have been made available to the House through the normal procedure for European Community documents and the final agreements appear in the Official Journal of the European Community.

Punjab

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Indian Government concerning human rights violations in the Punjab; what information his Department has as to the number of people arrested, injured or killed by security forces in the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We support the Indian Government in their efforts to deal with a serious challenge from terrorist violence in the Punjab. We have regularly encouraged the use of maximum restraint and the need to respect human rights, most recently on 11 December.

Up-to-date official figures for deaths and detentions are not available. Estimates vary. We believe some 1,218 people have been killed by the security forces between January and November this year, and some 3,520 by terrorists.

Burma

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of the Australian proposal for international economic sanctions against Burma/Myanmar's military regime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I assume that the hon. Lady is referring to United States congressional proposals. We are discussing these and other ideas for expressing our displeasure at the anti-democratic action of the Burmese military regime with our EC partners and other like-minded countries.

Thai-Burma Border

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the number of displaced people on the Thai-Burma border; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The latest border population figures are 44,539 persons on 1 November 1990. These figures were provided by a group of non-government organisations providing humanitarian assistance to refugees and displaced persons on the Thai-Burmese border, at the request of the Thai Government.

Pakistan

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the printed testimony given to the hearing of the House Foreign Affairs sub-committee on Asian and Pacific affairs of the United States Congress on 2 October, concerning the present status of Pakistan's nuclear weapons capability.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The official record of the hearing to which the hon. Gentleman refers will be available at the end of January 1991; this Department will then obtain a copy.

British Embassy, Kuwait

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will withdraw the remaining staff of the British embassy in Kuwait.

Mr. Hurd: Now that the overwhelming majority of the British community has been evacuated from Kuwait we have decided to withdraw our remaining embassy staff. We have asked them to prepare to leave within the next week. Thereafter we shall no longer be able to provide assistance to any remaining British nationals. We therefore strongly urge them to leave Kuwait.

We continue to recognise the legitimate Government of Kuwait, who have been informed of our decision to withdraw the embassy staff. We utterly reject Iraq's illegal occupation and annexation of Kuwait.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Primary School Enrolments

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the present trend in primary school enrolments; and what projections there are for primary school enrolments in each of the next five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: Primary school enrolments have risen steadily over the past five years. Latest projections, however, indicate that there will be a slight decline over the next five years. The figures, at January each year, are as follows:

	Actual total enrolment
1986	181,087
1987	181,893
1988	182,499
1989	184,241
1990	185,767

	Projected enrolment
1991	185,590
1992	185,030
1993	185,410
1994	185,150
1995	184,280

Detention

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many arrests have been made under the Police and Criminal Evidence (NI) Order since 1 January; how many persons have been detained for more than 24 hours under the said order; how many warrants of further detention have been issued under article 44 of the said order; and in how many cases access to legal advice has been delayed under article 59(8) of the said order.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is as follows for the period 1 January 1990 to 31 October 1990:

	Number
Number of arrests under the Police and Criminal Evidence (NI) Order 1989	18,428
Number of persons detained for more than 24 hours under the Order	368
Number of warrants of further detention under Article 44 of the Order	14
Cases of delayed access to legal advice under Article 59(8) of the Order	21

AIDS

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have died from AIDS in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The number of persons with AIDS who are known to have died each year in Northern Ireland since 1985 is given in the table:

	Number
1985	1
1986	—
1987	1
1988	1
1989	7
1990	[1]8

[1] to 30 November

Nursery Education

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many, and what percentage of, pre-school children in Northern Ireland are enrolled in maintained, integrated and controlled nursery schools in Northern Ireland; and whether he proposes to fund an increase in nursery school provision.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

	January 1990
Maintained pupils	1,091
Percentage[1]	2·0
Integrated pupils	0
Controlled pupils	3,762
Percentage[1]	6·9
Total pupils	4,853
Percentage[1]	8·9

[1] The number of pupils as a percentage of the 3 and 4-year-old population.

Limited resources for school building have made it necessary to give priority to provision for children of compulsory school age. It has not therefore been possible to provide an expansion of nursery provision apart from some limited growth in north and west Belfast under the "Making Belfast Work" initiative. I can offer no immediate prospect of change.

European Community Funds

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how much money has been expended in the Ballymoney borough council area out of the various EEC funds;

(2) how much money has been expended in the Moyle council area out of the various EEC funds;

(3) how much money has been expended in the Ballymena borough council area out of the various EEC funds.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are numerous sources of EC grant and while, in most cases, figures for the Province as a whole are available they are not analysed on the basis sought by the hon. Gentleman. Consideration is, however, being given to how such information might be made available in relation to future payments from the EC structural funds.

ENERGY

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the quantities of (a) spent nuclear fuel, (b) cladding for spent nuclear fuel and (c) nuclear waste that have been imported into the United Kingdom for each year from 1970 to 1989 inclusive; if he will give projected levels of imports for each category for each year from 1990 to 2000 inclusive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: British Nuclear Fuels plc and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority have imported some 4,000 tonnes of uranium as spent fuel since reprocessing began in the mid-1960s. They do not import nuclear waste, nor do they import cladding other than as part of the fuel. The projected levels are a commercial matter for the reprocessing companies.

Connection Charges

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the chairmen of the 12 regional distribution companies about the future level of connection charges for new houses.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None. It is for the Director General of Electricity Supply to adjudicate where disputes arise as to the reasonableness of connection costs.

Sizewell B

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what estimate he has made of the effects of the reported delays in the completion of the secondary safety computer system for the Sizewell B pressurised water reactor nuclear power station on (a) the non-fossil fuel obligation and (b) the external financing limit of Nuclear Electric;

(2) what discussions he has had with the chairman of Nuclear Electric concerning delays in completing the software for the operational secondary safety systems at the Sizewell B nuclear power station;

(3) what information he has received from the nuclear installations inspectorate about delays in the development of the operational secondary safety computer system for the Sizewell B nuclear power station.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The proposed protection system for Sizewell B consists of a computer-based primary protection system and a non-computer based secondary system. The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate is satisfied with the progress being made in the development of both systems.

The construction of Sizewell B power station is a matter for Nuclear Electric plc. The company has informed me that the construction of the station is proceeding ahead of schedule.

"The Energy Alternative"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of "The Energy Alternative" by Walter C. Patterson published by Boxtree Books.

Mr. Moynihan: A copy of this book is already held in the Department's library.

Gas Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what fees have been paid to Touche Ross by way of (a) retainers and (b) specific services in connection with its duties as auditors to the flotation of British Gas in each year since its flotation; and what proportion of such payments is related to services provided in the detection of illegal multiple share applications;

(2) what fees he has paid to the National Westminster bank registrar's department by way of (a) retainers and (b) specific payments in conection with suspected illegal multiple share applications for British Gas in each year since its flotation.

Mr. Moynihan: The information requested is commercially confidential.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on how many occasions since the flotation of British Gas in 1986, National Westminster bank registrar's department has provided services to his Department in respect of suspected illegal multiple share applications.

Mr. Moynihan: The registrars have been pleased to assist the police, the Department and the Crown prosecution service as necessary. It would involve disproportionate cost to establish the precise number of times on which assistance has been provided.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his total estimate of the total number of the individual applicants for shares in each of the 12 regional electricity companies grouped by head of household jointly with spouse and dependent children and other resident dependent relatives.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, when he expects to be in a position to provide statistics for the numbers of shareholders resident within the franchise area of each regional electricity company and the percentage of the total share capital owned by them.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We made available 54·6 per cent. of the total share capital in each company to the United Kingdom public. Of this, the percentages allocated to employees and preferential customers applying on priority forms are set out in the table. Applications received from customers, other than on priority application forms, cannot be separately identified and are therefore not included in the figures.

	Number of customer and employee priority applications '000s	Percentage of shares available to the public allocated to customers and employees
Eastern Electricity	603	53·4
East Midlands Electricity	303	37·5
London Electricity	289	36·0
Manweb	187	52·0
Midland Electricity	308	45·6
Northern Electric	165	53·3
Norweb	306	49·9
Seeboard	389	58·9
Southern Electric	472	48·4
South Wales Electricity	109	47·6
South Western Electricity	227	57·5
Yorkshire Electricity	256	42·0

Subsidence (Compensation)

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to receive British Coal's annual report on the administration of the subsidence compensation scheme for 1989-90.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have now received this report from British Coal and have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses today.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Detection

14. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to improve the crime detection rate.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The crime detection rate for the most serious offences, including violence against the person and sexual offences, remains high, at around 75 per cent. I shall continue to encourage chief officers to target their resources on serious and other crimes of particular concern to the public, although they must decide their own priorities and methods in the light of local circumstances. The police also need the help of the community to reduce the opportunities for crime, and I shall continue to encourage public involvement in crime prevention.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the clear-up rates of all crimes, violent crimes and homicides were in the Holmfirth and Huddersfield police districts for each year since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: The information collected centrally relates to police force areas and is published annually; for 1989, in tables 2.19, 2.20 and 2.21 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales"—Cm 1322. More detailed statistics relating to Holmfirth and Huddersfield are contained in the annual report of the chief constable for West Yorkshire. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Remand Prisoners

17. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give, for the last date figures are available, the number of remand prisoners held in police cells in Greater Manchester; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Yesterday there were 283 prisoners in cells of the Greater Manchester police. Of these, 73 were convicted and 210 were unconvicted.

Sunday Trading

19. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reform the law on Sunday trading in those areas where there is common agreement among all interested parties.

Mrs. Rumbold: Although there is agreement in principle between the interested parties in a few specific areas, there is still no agreement on specific proposals; and on Sunday trading as a whole, wide divisions of opinion remain.

Prison System

21. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve the British prison system over the next five years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The current medium-term plans of the prison service for England and Wales are to reduce overcrowding by bringing the average number of prison places into line with the average prison population, and by using all accommodation to its proper extent; to seek to ensure all cells have integral sanitation or access to night sanitation; to extend regime opportunities by increasing hours of prisoner occupation, education and association; and to complete and consolidate improvements in management and staff performance. These plans are kept under review and are formally re-examined annually.

Plans for the prison services in Scotland and Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Football Ticket Touts

22. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to extend the proposed legislation outlawing ticket touting at football matches to other sporting events.

Mr. John Patten: No. We agree with Lord Justice Taylor that the considerations are different. Touting at football matches creates public order problems because it encourages supporters without tickets to attend games, often leading to obstruction and disorder, and it undermines the segregation of supporters of different teams. Touting elsewhere may be offensive, but is not a serious threat to public order.

Crime Prevention

23. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the Association of Chief Police Officers to discuss crime prevention initiatives.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend will be meeting the Association of Chief Police Officers' representatives shortly and expects to discuss a wide range of issues with them, including the fight against crime.

Charity Legislation

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had concerning the Woodfield report on charity legislation.

Mr. John Patten: A wide range of charities and other interested bodies and individuals made helpful comments on the Woodfield report. The Government took account of those comments when preparing last year's White Paper on charities and will, of course, give further attention to them when preparing legislation.

Drinking Clubs

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to review the laws appertaining to illegal drinking establishments with a view to granting confiscatory powers for properties and moneys and increasing penalties for those found guilty.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans to review the penalties for selling liquor without a licence. Recent sentencing practice suggests that the current maximum penalty of a level 4 fine, which the Criminal Justice Bill will increase from £1,000 to £2,500, and six months' imprisonment adequately reflect the seriousness of the offence. There is already a power to order the forfeiture of property used in the commission of such an offence and to disqualify the offender from holding a licence upon a second or subsequent conviction.

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide funds to the police for the purchase of a computer that can age people's photographs and thus help identify someone who has been missing for several years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The provision of equipment for individual police forces is a matter for police authorities. The E-Fit computer system, which was developed by the Home Office, enables a skilled operator to change the appearance of both facial composites and original photographs. The Home Office is currently considering the production of a guide to assist police officers in the use of E-Fit to age faces.

Lorrain Osman

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about the Brixton remand prisoner Mr. Lorrain Osman; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Mr. Osman is not a remand prisoner. He was committed to custody on 1 June 1987 to await his return to Hong Kong. The case remains unresolved because of the series of appeals which Mr. Osman has initiated against his extradition. A fugitive cannot be surrendered while proceedings on an appeal in this country are pending.

Since November, the Home Office has received about 20 letters relating to the case.

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service for employees within his Department, stating (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: On 5 December 1990 the Home Office had 45,766 permanent staff. Occupational health services for these staff are provided, on a payment basis, by the civil service occupational health service which employs some 100 fully qualified occupational health professionals —doctors, nurses and hygiene and safety advisers—in a network of regional offices.

Police Forces

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the size of the police force, both uniformed and civilian staff, in the Holmfirth and Huddersfield police districts in 1979 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The tables show the police strength in Holmfirth and Huddersfield for December 1979 and November 1990.

Holmfield Sub-division[1]

	Strength
	Police	Civilian
1979 (December)	92	8
1990 (November)	103	23

Huddersfield Sub-division[1]

	Strength
	Police	Civilian
1979 (December)	293	96
1990 (November)	284	102

[1]The boundaries of both sub-divisions have changed since 1979 and therefore the manpower figures are not directly comparable.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to (a) the report of Mr. Geoffrey Dear, inspector of constabulary for the midlands, on the state of Derbyshire police and (b) the extent to which the efficiency of the force has been influenced by controls imposed by Derbyshire county council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) on 5 December 1990 at columns 117-18.

Wormhoudt Massacre

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received a report from the German prosecutor following the interviews with survivors of the Wormhoudt massacre on 5 October 1989 and other statements provided on 20 June.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend has not received a report from the German prosecutor, but the German Ministry of Justice has undertaken to keep the British Government informed of the prosecutor's eventual decision.

Broadcasting

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the last year the broadcasting unit of his Department has made contact with (a) the BBC and (b) the IBA; and what subjects were raised.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Officials from the broadcasting department of the Home Office have been in touch with the BBC and the IBA regularly throughout the year. A wide range of broadcasting subjects were discussed, including matters connected with the Broadcasting Act 1990.

Vietnamese Boat People

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will offer to allow the 111 Vietnamese boat people whose boat was destroyed by the Hong Kong authorities to enter the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government have agreed to resettle a further 2,000 Vietnamese refugees over the three years to June 1992. We will be happy to consider the cases of any of the 111 who meet the criteria for selection to come to the United Kingdom under this programme.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to send to all recipients of mobility allowance over 18 years of age a reminder that they are eligible for a proxy or postal vote at elections without the need of supporting signatures of qualified persons.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are not aware that there is a general lack of knowledge among electors who receive a mobility allowance about their absent voting rights. However, we are considering ways in which the provisions allowing an absent vote both for an indefinite period and at a particular election might be made more widely known.

Racism

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he proposes to strengthen the legislation against racist literature.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Public Order Act 1986 strengthened the relevant legislation. We have no current plans for further amendment to it.

LSD and Strychnine

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department and the police are taking to discover the source of self-adhesive stickers laced with LSD and strychnine which are being offered to children; and whether anybody has yet been apprehended for offering these substances.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the national drugs intelligence unit and the police that they have not been able to find any evidence whatsoever to support claims that such stickers exist. In the absence of such evidence, the police here and in other countries believe that circular letters claiming that such stickers are being offered to children are a hoax, although they remain ready to examine any evidence which is put to them.

Channel 3

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department intends to abandon the contiguity rule when implementing the ownership restrictions relating to Channel 3 franchises under schedule 2 of the Broadcasting Act.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As I made clear in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 4 December at columns 85-87, we intend, through the supplementary ownership rules, to allow one body to hold a controlling interest in two regional Channel 3 licences as long as they are not both large, and for this purpose nine of the 15 licence areas will be designated as large. When we originally announced our proposals on ownership of Channel 3 licences we envisaged designating only five or six licence areas as large, but providing in addition that co-ownership of contiguous areas would not be permitted. We believe on further consideration that a contiguity rule could give rise to unintended problems and that the need for such a rule can in large part be met by designating a higher number of "large" areas as we propose.

Asylum

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate the average length of time taken to determine applications for asylum made (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) at posts overseas.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 11 December 1990]: Information is given in the following table.

Estimated average length of time between the receipt of an asylum application and the decision, for cases decided in the third quarter of 1990

	Months
(a) Applications made in the United Kingdom[1]	13·5
(b) Applications made at British posts overseas, and referred[2] to the Home Office for decision	14

[1] At ports or after entry.

[2] Excludes certain applications by nationals of Afghanistan and Somalia to the British High Commission in, respectively, New Delhi and Dhaka, which are being processed locally. Information on the average decision time for these cases is not currently available centrally.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each month since September 1989 to the nearest available date how many applications made within the United Kingdom for asylum were made (a) by applicants in the United Kingdom with leave, (b) by overstayers and (c) by alleged illegal entrants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 12 December 1990]: Information is given in the table. Reliable estimates of the status of applicants after May 1990 are not yet available.

Applications [1] [2] for asylum in the United Kingdom made after entry, by status of principal applicant September 1989 to May 1990

	1989				1990
	September	October	November	December	January	February	March	April	May
Status of principal applicant at time of application
Within existing leave	535	610	420	515	600	410	440	500	475
Overstayers[3]	60	70	60	40	65	75	80	80	115
Illegal entrant	50	30	50	45	85	30	50	95	105
Information not available	80	90	50	75	150	170	185	65	80
Total	720	800	580	670	900	685	760	735	775

[1] Provisonal figures: those for 1990 may understate because of delays in recording. Figures rounded to nearest 5.
[2] Including dependants applying at the same time, or subsequently to date.
[3] Including those who were subject to deportation action as an overstayer or on other grounds.

Police Officers (Homicides)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many homicides of police officers have been reported in England and Wales since the passage of the Homicide Act 1957; and how many cases have resulted in conviction for murder.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 12 December 1990]: Information on the number of homicides of police officers is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales"—table 4.4*(a)* and 4.4*(b)* in the latest issue for 1989, Cm. 1322—copies of which are available in the Library.

During the period 1958-1989, there were 51 homicides of police officers reported in England and Wales. Of these, 27 resulted in conviction for murder.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Exports (Iraq)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what communications his Department has had with the firms, Walter Somers Ltd. and Sheffield Forgemasters Ltd., regarding the export of goods to Iraq.

Mr. Lilley: My Department has had three approaches from Walter Somers Ltd. and two letters from Forgemasters Engineering about equipment now known to be for the Iraqi long-range gun project.

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to which overall contracts the gun components for Iraq were part of; and whether any such contracts were promoted by his Department through the British Overseas Trade Board export intelligence service.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 December 1990]: Orders for components of the Iraqi long-range gun used the number of a genuine petrochemical project known as PC2. Genuine orders for project PC2 were promoted through the BOTB's export intelligence service, but none of the information passed related to the Iraqi gun project.

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action was taken after the report of Walter Somers that it had been approached about aiming equipment in the Iraqi supergun order.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 December 1990]: Walter Somers was advised that an export licence would not be granted for such equipment. No further action was taken in the absence of a connection between this and any other orders.

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the day on which it was made known to his Department that Dr. Gerald Bull had conceived plans involving piping for a gun or launcher.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 December 1990]: Evidence began to accumulate on this in late 1989.

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what specifications of the Iraqi supergun export order were given to his Department.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 December 1990]: Certain descriptions and drawings of materials now known to relate to the Iraqi long-range gun were passed to the Department by Walter Somers and Sheffield Forgemasters in 1988.

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any inquiries were made to the Export Credits Guarantee Department in respect of the Iraqi gun export order.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 December 1990]: For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it has been the policy of successive Governments not to disclose details of commercial relations between ECGD and its customers.

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the specifications of the Iraqi export order supergun were first available to his Department.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 December 1990]: No full specification of the supergun as a whole has ever been passed to this Department.

Export Controls

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps are taken by his Department to ascertain the accuracy of the information that is supplied by those firms seeking licences to export goods under the Exports of Goods (Control) Order 1987.

Mr. Lilley: I have nothing to add to the statement made by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade on 29 November, column 1060.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the proper functioning of his Department's procedures for scrutinising licence applications under the Exports of Goods (Control) Order 1987.

Mr. Lilley: The administration of export licensing by my Department was throroughly reviewed in 1988 and the controls are kept under continuous review to ensure that they remain effective and are efficiently administered.

Technology (Imports and Exports)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out the occasions since 1979 when he has used the provisions of the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939 to prohibit the export of sensitive technologies or materials relating to United Kingdom commitments to (a) the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, (b) COCOM controls and (c) the missile technology control regime; and what goods have been subject to forfeit under these provisions over the same time period.

Mr. Lilley: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Pakistan (Nuclear Weapons)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he possesses in regard to attempts by Pakistan between February and April 1990 to purchase advanced high-temperature furnaces capable of assisting in the production of nuclear weapons from the Consarc Company and Torval Ltd., based in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lilley: It is not the practice to discuss individual export control matters.

Defence Equipment Licensing

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what category of licences are included in the figures for export licences granted for the sale of defence equipment in 1988 and 1989 as listed in his answer of 15 October, Official Report, column 685, which are not included in his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 792, to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks).

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 December 1990]: Licences for personal firearms and shotguns are included in the figures supplied in the answer of 15 October. These licences were not included in the answer of 21 February which dealt specifically with military equipment.

SCOTLAND

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service for employees within his Department; and (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mr. Lang: All civil service departments and agencies have access to the services of the civil service occupational health service which employs some 100 fully qualified occupational health professionals—doctors, nurses and hygiene and safety advisers. It operates via a network of regional offices throughout the United Kingdom.

At 1 December 1990 13,268 staff were employed in the Scottish Office, Scottish prison service, the Registers of Scotland executive agency and the three minor departments (Scottish Record Office, General Register Office for Scotland, and the Scottish Courts Administration) for which I am responsible.

Firearms (Visitors' Permits)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications have been dealt with for British visitors' permits under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 in respect of each police authority in Scotland for the most recent period of 12 months in respect of which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: For the 12-month period from 1 October 1989, when the permit scheme was introduced, the information is as follows:

Police Force	Firearm	Shotgun
Central	19	56
Dumfries and Galloway	401	161
Fife	27	73
Grampian	397	806
Lothian and Borders	174	566
Northern	1,379	1,117
Strathclyde	823	387
Tayside	457	2,374
Total for Scotland	3,677	5,540

Non-pasteurised Milk

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment his Department has made of the health implications of the consumption of non-pasteurised milk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Retail sales of unpasteurised milk have been banned in Scotland since the introduction in 1983 of compulsory pasteurisation. This was in response to widespread public concern about the risks associated with untreated milk following a number of serious outbreaks of milk-borne disease in Scotland. There are no proposals to change the Government's compulsory pasteurisation policy, which has led to the virtual eradication of milk-borne disease in Scotland.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding incidents of illness or disease in Scotland in the last 10 years which can be attributed to the consumption of non-pasteurised milk.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of reported cases of food poisoning associated with the consumption of untreated cows' milk for each year since 1980 are as follows:

	Number of outbreaks	Number of individual cases
1980	5	103
1981	8	782
1982	14	539
1983	7	29
1984	5	27
1985	8	74
1986	2	10
1987	5	30
1988	2	5
1989	—	—

Alcohol Abuse

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the projects and centres to which to the Scottish Office has contributed financially in respect of research into alcohol abuse and or misuse, with the figure for each such project or centre for projects to tackle alcohol abuse and misuse.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 11 December 1990, column 373.

Antares

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what reports the Lord Advocate has sought or received on the sinking of the Antares; what action he is considering; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The procurator fiscal at Kilmarnock is investigating the circumstances of the loss of this vessel and the deaths of the crew and will report to Crown counsel.

Designated Places

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the designated places set up in each of the past 10 years and those planned for the next two years; and what financial assistance was given and is to be provided for the setting up and running of these places.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Albyn house in Aberdeen is at present the only location designated by the Secretary of State in terms of section 5 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980. It opened in 1983 and received £150,000 capital and £408,000 revenue funding, over four years, from the Scottish Office. A designated place is under construction in Inverness and is planned to open next April. It will receive up to £150,000 capital grant this financial year and tapering revenue grant towards its running costs over the next three years. The amount of revenue grant for 1991-92 is under consideration.

Requests for grant under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 have been submitted to the Scottish Office for designated places in Port Glasgow and in the city of Glasgow, both with the aim of opening in 1992-93. These are being considered and decisions will be announced early next year. Scottish Office financial assistance depends on the nature of the applications received and on competing demands on available resources.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now announce the budget and members of the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: In view of the importance which I attach to nature conservation in Scotland, I have decided that the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland should be launched next year with a budget of £19 million. This is over 40 per cent. of the NCC budget of £45 million for the whole of Great Britain this year. This will not only allow the existing work to continue, but will provide scope for new initiatives such as a scientific programme relevant to conservation management, delegation of decision-making to the local level, practical conservation projects and more user-friendly procedures.

The Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland represents a major Government initiative for nature conservation in Scotland. Building on the work of the existing council, we now have all the right ingredients to bring our initiative to fruition. The combination of Magnus Magnusson's dedicated and positive leadership, an experienced and expert council and a budget allowing it to embark on new tasks will give the body the best possible start.

In addition to Magnus Magnusson as chairman I have appointed the following:

Mr. Bruce Cowe
The Earl of Dalkeith
Professor George M. Dunnet
Mr. David Laird
Sir John Lister-Kaye
Councillor Duncan McPherson
Professor Alasdair McIntyre
Dr. Patricia Monaghan
Dr. William Mutch
Professor Christopher Smout
Professor David Sugden

My appointments to the council represent a wide variety of interests. There are scientists of international repute engaged in research on conservation issues, those with land management experience who have a vital practical role to play, and others involved with the voluntary conservation movement. I am sure that this strong team under the leadership of Magnus Magnusson will improve understanding and foster a creative relationship with those involved in the management of Scotland's natural resources.

The new agency and the Countryside Commission for Scotland, to which I have also given additional funding, will provide a sound foundation for the creation of Scottish Natural Heritage. I am particularly keen to promote the integration of the two bodies and I know that Magnus Magnusson as its chairman-designate, as well as Bruce Cowe and Bill Mutch who are members of both boards, and the other members and staff of both bodies will carry forward the merger with enthusiasm.

RENAVAL Programme

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of the European Community's RENAVAL programme in Inverclyde and Glasgow.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 12 December 1990]: On 31 July the Commission announced that the travel-to-work areas of Greenock and Glasgow had been declared eligible under the RENAVAL Community programme. A programme of measures is being prepared at present and will be submitted shortly to the Commission for approval.

Disabled People

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the number of disabled people in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole who could benefit from the sheltered placement scheme; and how many such persons are now so placed in (i) Strathclyde and (ii) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 12 December 1990]: I estimate the number of disabled people who could benefit from the sheltered placement scheme to be around 10 per cent. of those registered as disabled. At April 1990 there were around 34,000 registered disabled people in Scotland as a whole, of which about 15,700 were resident in Strathclyde. At October 1990 there were 218 such persons employed under the sheltered placement scheme in Strathclyde and 683 people employed through the scheme in Scotland as a whole.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled People (Anti-discrimination Legislation)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions his Department has had with disability organisations regarding the introduction of anti-discrimination legislation.

Mr. Jackson: Ministers and officials from this Department have regular discussions with disability organisations during which the subject of anti-discrimination legislation is sometimes raised.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Medical Research Council

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many administrative staff are employed by the Medical Research Council at its London headquarters; and what is the cost in absolute terms and as a percentage of its total budget.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I understand that as of 10 December 1990 the MRC is employing 343 administrative staff at its London headquarters office. In the 1989-90 financial year its full running costs were £8·7 million—4·7 per cent. of the council's overall budget.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to finalise the draft circular on staffing for pupils with special educational needs which was issued for consultation in January.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department has today published circular 11/90 on staffing for pupils with special educational needs and I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Primary Schools

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received the Audit Commission's report on rationalising primary school provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend and I welcome the publication of the Audit Commission's report on rationalising primary school provision. The Government will continue to urge LEAs to remove surplus school places. Despite significant progress in some areas, there are still too many, as this study shows.

The Audit Commission's report indicates that about 900,000, or roughly one fifth, of all primary school places in England and Wales are surplus to requirements. The commission points out that surplus capacity involves expenditure which could be more productively used to improve the quality of education. Its report calls on LEAs to tackle this issue by reviewing their position and by initiating local discussion of proposals for change. The commission notes that education in small primary schools is significantly more expensive per pupil; and its report indicates that unit costs tend to rise steeply when numbers fall below 80 or 90 pupils. It recommends that these costs are taken into account alongside other factors when LEAs review the pattern of provision.

It is not possible to eliminate all surplus places and the Government recognise that there are circumstances in which it is neither practical nor desirable to close small schools. But the Audit Commission clearly demonstrates the benefits which can accrue from a more efficient pattern of primary education and the Government share its view that parents and others should be given more opportunity to assess the case for change. We look to LEAs to make the necessary statutory proposals.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Young People (Benefits)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost, in 1991-92, of raising income support, community charge benefit and housing benefit personal allowances for people under 25 years to the level for those aged 25 years and over.

Miss Widdecombe: This information is not available, but I shall write to the hon. Member when it is.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons aged 16 and 17 years are disqualified from benefit (a) for not taking a YTS place, (b) because they are homeless, and (c) by any other category in (i) 1988, (ii) 1989 and (iii) at the latest available date.

Miss Widdecombe: Information in the form requested is not available. However, in 1988 there were 3,881 disqualifications from unemployment benefit in Great Britain because a person either voluntarily left a YTS place without good cause, lost a place through misconduct, refused without good cause to apply for or to accept a place or neglected to avail himself of a reasonable opportunity of a place. In 1989, there were 863 such disqualifications. In 1990, up to September 1990, there have been 585 such disqualifications. Placements on YTS or YT schemes are not limited to 16 and 17-year-olds.

Homelessness is not a ground for refusal of benefit.

The number of applications for income support refused under the "severe hardship" provisions applying to 16 and 17-year-olds since September 1988 are:

	Number
1988	773
1989	6,164
[1]1990	7,377

[1] To end of November.

Concessionary Travel

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response he made to recommendations from the European Commission concerning travel concession cards for over-60s; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The proposed European Commission over-60s card is intended to establish that a person over 60 has the opportunity to take advantage of a wide range of existing concessions throughout the Community, including transport. We are continuing to study the implications for the United Kingdom and will respond to the Commission in due course.

Benefit Values

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East on 21 November, Official Report, column 132, if he will give the current monetary value or range of monetary values of each benefit, together with the date of the last adjustment in each such level of benefit and the previous monetary value or range of monetary values of each such benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the table at columns 849-58, on 25 October 1989 which gives, in most cases, the present rate of each benefit and its value immediately prior to the last adjustment, which for the majority of benefits was 9 April 1990. Information on those benefits which were not increased on this date, or where the value has changed subsequently, is given in the table.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the monetary level, or range of monetary levels, for invalidity benefit when it was introduced in September 1971, together with equivalent details and dates for each subsequent change in benefit levels, showing the average number of people in receipt of such benefit levels at each of its stages.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is as follows. Information on standard weekly rates of invalidity pension, invalidity allowance and average numbers receiving benefit is in table A. The maximum amounts of earnings-related additional pension payable with invalidity pension are in table B.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have claimed mobility allowance on the grounds that they are both deaf and blind at the last date for which figures are available; how many of these claims were (a) successful, (b) refused and (c) awaiting adjudication; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) of 11 December at column 424.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of enabling people who qualify only for a care component of the disability living allowance before the age of 65 years to receive a mobility component if their mobility needs increase after that age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 6 December 1990]: The extent to which people qualifying for a care component before age 65 would be likely to become entitled to a mobility component after reaching age 65 cannot be predicted with any certainty. It is estimated, however, that the eventual cost could be in the order of £100 million a year.

DEFENCE

Fire Fighting

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Royal Air Force practice with regard to charging local authorities for airlifting fire crews to fight fires on islands; and whether any standing arrangements exist with individual fire authorities to make helicopters available for this purpose.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Where military search and rescue SAR helicopters fly to islands to rescue people from life-threatening fires, local authorities are not charged for airlifting fire crews at the same time. Where life is not in danger, however, and SAR helicopters would not otherwise have attended the incident, appropriate charges are raised. There are currently standing arrangements with the local authorities of Devon, Cornwall and the Highlands and Islands covering such assistance.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department has had or is having with (a) the United States of America and (b) the French Governments regarding the loan of a ballistic missile submarine.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There have been no such discussions.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) for how long he intends that HMS Dreadnought should remain at Rosyth naval dockyard; (2) what is his present policy in respect of the disposal of the hulks of the reactor components of retired nuclear-powered submarines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The question of the disposal of decommissioned nuclear submarines is under active consideration but no final decision has yet been taken. Meanwhile HMS Dreadnought will continue safely to be stored afloat at Rosyth royal dockyard.

Sexual Orientation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Royal Navy makes any payments to those giving information about service men's sexual orientation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Fishing Boats (Accidents)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail the arrangements he has agreed with the Clyde Fishermen's Association to avoid further accidents between fishing boats and submarines in the firth of Clyde; whether such arrangements will extend to the Irish sea and its approaches; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will extend the submarine notification procedure between the Royal Navy and the fishing industry for the firth of Clyde to the Irish sea.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information on the times and areas in which submarine activity is planned will be broadcast to fishermen by the coastguard every four hours using VHF radio. Similar information will also be available through the operations room at Faslane. The scheme will be introduced in the Clyde area on 17 December. Any extension of this scheme to other sea areas would have to take account both of its working in the Clyde area and of its practicability elsewhere.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on the trials of the Seametrix system of transponders on fishing nets; when he expects them to conclude; if the cost of such systems will be funded by the Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Trials of a static electronic net-avoidance device have already been carried out. It is planned to hold a series of further trials, involving a towed prototype. These will begin on 13 December and will include the participation of Royal Navy vessels. No decision has been taken on the funding of such devices if and when a product becomes commercially available.

Tornado (Power Line Incident)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received regarding an incident involving a Tornado cutting a power line near Carsphairn on 26 November; what information he now has about the incident; what action he is taking as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In addition to the hon. Member's letter of 29 November, we have received one other. A unit inquiry was held immediately after the incident, and confirmed that a Tornado GR1 aircraft struck a wire near Dalmellington at approximately 11.50 am on 26 November, while undertaking a properly authorised sortie in the Borders tactical training area. The aircrew were authorised to fly at a minimum separation distance of 100 ft above the ground or obstacles. The inquiry judged that the aircraft was 100 ft or more above the ground when it struck the wire. Following the inquiry, the aircrew were formally interviewed by higher authority before departing for operational duties in the Gulf.

Antares

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to receive the report of the naval inquiry into the sinking of the Antares.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The board of inquiry should complete its work later this week. The report will be forwarded to Ministers after it has been considered by the Commander-in-Chief.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), Official Report, 28 November, column 442, he will set out for each of the nuclear tests listed the proportion of the cost of each test charged to the United Kingdom and the cost in 1990 in sterling of each test conducted; and which of the tests resulted in the venting of radioactive gases to the atmosphere.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice to reveal financial information associated with United Kingdom participation in nuclear tests. Of the 14 tests listed in my answer to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 28 November at column 442, there were operational releases of radioactive gases from three, namely Gibne, Armada and Barnwell. In none of these was any radioactivity detected at locations beyond the boundary of the Nevada test site.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has received any information from the French Defence Ministry concerning the nuclear test conducted by France at Muroroa on 21 November.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has received no information direct from the French Ministry of Defence on this subject. However, I understand that the French Ministry of Defence issued a statement via Agence France Presse immediately after the test on 21 November.

WALES

Drugs

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department will take steps to ascertain whether any consultants employed in regional specialty units funded by his Department are prevented from presenting the drugs of their choice to patients because of financial constraints.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Except where central guidance may be issued, this is a matter for the appropriate managing health authorities.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if regional specialty renal units in Wales may prescribe the drug Erythropoietin to any patient that the consultant considers appropriate without financial constraint.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Under the new management and financial arrangements which will come into effect from 1 April 1991 it will be for individual health authorities to determine appropriate arrangements relating to the prescription of drugs. In the meantime, funds have been made available to those health authorities responsible for main renal units in Wales to assist with the additional cost of providing Erythropoietin where this is considered clinically necessary.

Ministerial Duties

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the proposed ministerial duties of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State.

Mr. David Hunt: I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 6 December 1990.

Council Housing

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review the systems used by local authorities in Wales in allocating council-owned properties to prospective tenants in respect of their even-handedness.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Advice to local housing authorities concerning the allocation of council houses was produced by the housing management advisory panel for Wales in February 1988, and issued from the Department with the endorsement of the then Committee of Welsh District Councils. If the hon. Gentleman has any suggestions for further advice I should be happy to consider them.

River Pollution

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the confirmed pollution incidents in Wales since the establishment of the Welsh region of the National Rivers Authority, specifying the nature and extent of the pollution, and indicating (i) whether a prosecution is pending, (ii) the number of prosecutions that have occurred, and (iii) the number of prosecutions that have been successful together with the penalties.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This is a matter for the National Rivers Authority.

Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will express the amount of money allocated to each county in Wales to tackle alcohol abuse (a) as a figure per head in each county and (b) as a figure per head of those estimated as having alcohol problems in each county.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: It is not intended to allocate money from the central fund on a proportional basis to counties.

NHS Employees (Guidance)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has completed consideration of the case for further guidance to be issued to national health service employees on the private practice interests in potential competition with their work in income-generating departments in the national health service.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: In conjunction with the Department of Health, work is proceeding on the preparation of guidance dealing with staff-employer relationships in the NHS, including conflicts of interests.

Crown Buildings

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes there have been in the place of work of sub-divisions of his Department as between different Crown buildings (a) in the present financial year and (b) in 1988-89.

Mr. David Hunt: The only significant changes took place in 1989-90 when the agriculture department's office in Aberystwyth was moved and the staff transferred to offices at Trawsgoed, and in 1990-91 when the Welsh Office education department moved from Cathays Park to Llanishen, Cardiff.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for changing the place of work of sub-divisions of his Department between different Crown buildings (a) in the current financial year, (b) in the coming financial year and (c) subsequent to the departure of the Exports Credits Guarantee Department Insurance Services Group from Crown building, Cathays Park.

Mr. David Hunt: There are currently no firm plans to change the location of Welsh Office divisions. My Department's accommodation needs are however kept under constant review; if additional accommodation becomes available in the New Crown building, Cathays Park, that will be taken into account.

NHS Information Systems

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, what is the additional (a) capital cost, (b) staffing revenue costs and (c) non-staff revenue costs associated with the establishment of improved information systems and detailed costing of services in the current and next financial year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Developments to improve information systems generally, including the costing of services, are being undertaken as part of the all-Wales information and information technology strategy for the NHS in Wales. The total available funds provided by the Department in 1990-91 to support the strategy are £12·2 million capital, and an additional £3·36 million revenue. A precise division between staffing and non-staff revenue costs is not readily available. The funding for 1991-92 will be announced in the new year.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, what is his best estimate of the present degree of accuracy of the costing of different treatments by the national health service service providers in Wales; and what he expects it to be after the improved information systems are in place.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: National health service service providers do not at present have the computerised information systems to cost services at sub-speciality level as a matter of routine. The implementation of improved information systems over the next two to three years, and in particular the case mix management and new financial ledger systems, will give NHS providers increasingly detailed information at patient level which will enable them to utilise their resources with increased efficiency to provide a better quality service to patients.

Building Works

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 5 December to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher), what factors led to the increase from £299,405 in 1988-89 to £686,144 in his Department's expenditure on building repairs, maintenance and improvements.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department's normal programme of repairs, maintenance and improvements was augmented by three major schemes:

the refurbishment of offices at Llanishen, Cardiff, for staff who were moved to release space in Cathays Park for extra staff working on the implementation of the NHS review;
the rationalisation of accommodation at Gabalfa, Cardiff for veterinary advisers and ADAS; and the conversion of premises to workshops and storage space at the Colchester Avenue industrial estate, Cardiff.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 5 December to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher), what is the breakdown between (a) Crown building, Cathays Park, (b) Gwydyr house, Whitehall, (c) Ty Glas road, Llanishen and (d) other in the 1988-89 and 1989-90 total of departmental expenditure on building repairs, maintenance and improvements.

Mr. David Hunt: Expenditure incurred by my Department on building repairs, maintenance and improvements was as follows:

	1988-89 £	1989-90 £
Cathays Park	77,542	115,312
Gwydyr House	5,077	11,734
Llanishen	3,219	272,024
Other	213,567	287,074
	299,405	686,144

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 5 December to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher), Official Report, column 151, what is his estimate of expenditure on building repairs, maintenance and improvements in (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92; and if he will list the major jobs being carried out or proposed to be carried out in that period.

Mr. David Hunt: The forecast outturn of my Department's expenditure on building repairs, maintenance and improvements in 1990-91 is £510,000. Plans for 1991-92 are not yet firm, but expenditure is likely to be of the same order. Major works have been or will be completed in the following buildings in 1990-91:

Agriculture Department, Caernarfon;
Education Department, Bangor;
Medical Examination Centre, Port Talbot;
Agriculture Department, Trawsgoed;
Transport and Highways Department, Llanishen;
Old Crown Building, Cathays Park.

It is hoped to undertake major works at the following buildings in 1991-92:

Medical Examination Centre, Pontypridd;
Agriculture Department, Caernarfon;

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

County Courts

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General how he intends to consult Parliament about changes in county court procedure for rent arrears and possession actions.

The Attorney-General: The proposed changes in procedure follow recommendations of the civil justice review, which was presented to Parliament in June 1988. The Lord Chancellor announced his acceptance of them in April 1989. Public consultation on the proposed new rent action took place from the end of September to 19 November 1990. The Government are now considering how to proceed in the light of responses. Reforms to the existing procedure in possession cases are planned for July 1992, and the Lord Chancellor will be issuing a consultation paper on the proposed new rules.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Southern Africa

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimates have been made of the amount of aid needed for reconstruction in South Africa, once apartheid has been dismantled, and in Mozambique and Angola, once peace is achieved.

Mrs. Chalker: It is too early to assess how much aid will be needed for these purposes. Britain remains committed to the creation of a prosperous and just southern Africa. This commitment underlies our current involvement in the region, and will continue to do so as appropriate and as circumstances change.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the size and purpose of (a) British and (b) EC aid for black South Africans.

Mrs. Chalker: The purpose of the British aid programme is to encourage the process of change in South Africa and to help black South Africans improve their abilities to play their rightful role in Government and economic and social development. In 1990-91 we expect to spend around £8 million from the bilateral programme, a figure that is set to rise in the years ahead.

The European Community aims to assist those disadvantaged by apartheid through projects which promote non-racialism, encourage democratic practices, and enjoy community support; and through non-violent organisations working for peaceful change. The European Community's South African programme amounts to the equivalent of approximately £20 million in 1990, of which our share will be about £4 million.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of all aid committed to the countries of Southern Africa and to SADCC in 1989 and 1990, stating the purpose of each allocation.

Mrs. Chalker: British bilateral aid commitments for the countries of southern Africa and SADCC cover a wide range of development activities, for expenditure in 1989 and 1990 and, in a number of cases, for the years beyond. They range from formal obligations to capital projects both large, such as the rehabilitation of Limpopo railway, and small, expenditure on which often stretches over several years, to technical co-operation where we are committed to the provision of expatriate expertise and training for local officers. The numbers of technical co-operation officers and trainees from the region both run into hundreds.

The most prominent commitments we have are for the SADCC projects and for the provision of programme aid in particular countries. Our commitment to SADCC amounts in total to £70 million, of which £10 million was pledged in 1990 and £15 million was committed in 1989 to finance the second phase of the Limpopo railway project. Programme aid pledges in 1989 and 1990, taken together, were made for Malawi (£10·5 million); Mozambique (£10 million); Tanzania (£17·5 million); and Zambia (£30 million).

In addition, Britain has pledged £10 million for Namibia, for commitment over three years from 1990, and an extra £10 million for our aid programme for black South Africans, for expenditure over four years. A pledge of £10 million was made to Zimbabwe in 1989, again for expenditure over a number of years.

Details of actual expenditure in 1989 can be obtained from "British Aid Statistics".

Pachamama Society

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the meeting between an official of his Department and Mr. Keochlin and Miss Sandys of Pachamama.

Mrs. Chalker: Mr. Keochlin and Miss Sandys of the Pachamama Society of Peru visited my Department on 28 November and provided information on the objectives and organisation of the society to one of my officials. There was a discussion of the United Kingdom's bilateral aid programme to Peru and in Latin America in general, with particular emphasis on environmental matters.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Inspectorate of Education

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the estimated annual cost of Her Majesty's inspectorate of education in England.

Mr. Eggar: The estimated net recurrent cost of Her Majesty's inspectorate of education in England in 1990-91 is £28·1 million.

Books

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the number of books procured for university libraries and polytechnics libraries in 1970, 1980 and 1990.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This information is not collected centrally. Book and other purchases are for individual institutions to determine within their total resources.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the provision of Government funding for books at universities and polytechnics in 1979 and 1989, respectively (a) overall, at constant prices and (b) per student, at constant prices; and what has been the average increase in the cost of such text books in this period.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The higher education funding councils do not reserve part of their funding for book provision. It is for individual institutions to determine their expenditure within the total resources at their disposal.

Student Loans

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the total take-up of student loans over the past 12 months; and if he will list the take-up of individual loans as a percentage of student funding in each university and polytechnic.

Mr. Alan Howarth: As at 12 December 1990, over 66,000 students had applied for loans, representing 10·5 per cent. of the estimated number of eligible students in the United Kingdom.

Figures showing the take-up of individual loans as a percentage of student funding in each university and polytechnic are not available. For a student who lives away from home, but not in London, and who receives the basic maintenance grant, the full-year loan facility in 1990-91 is nearly 16 per cent. of the total resources available from the uprated grant and the loan combined.

Science and Engineering Research Council

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many research grants will be funded in 1990-91 as a result of the Science and Engineering Research Council settlement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The total number of research grants being supported by the Science and Engineering Research Council in December 1990 was 5,019.

Universities and Polytechnics

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many universities and polytechnics are known to his Department to have cash flow problems; if he will list them; and if he will make a statement on the practice of funds being made available three months in arrears.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The management of cash flow is for individual universities, polytechnics and colleges. Detailed information is not collected centrally. Under the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1990, local education authorities must pay termly instalments of tuition fees promptly. The funding councils aim to take the general incidence of fee and other income into account in determining the profiles for their monthly payments of grant.

Science Parks

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much of the available EC money for science park development has been taken up by universities and polytechnics in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The development of science parks is not specifically funded through the EC framework programme and, to date, no funds have been made available for that purpose.

Hardship Funds

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many universities and polytechnics administer hardship funds; how much money has been paid out from these funds; and to what extent they are oversubscribed.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to access funds, which were introduced for the first time this academic year. All universities and polytechnics have had allocations from total Great Britain provision of £25 million. Detailed information about the operation of the scheme will not be available until after the end of the academic year.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what obligations the governors of schools which obtain grant-maintained status are under to honour the terms of existing dual-use agreements, in particular the obligation to reimburse a dual-use partner part of its capital investment in the event of the governors' serving notice to terminate the agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The education assets board is responsible for identifying the property rights and liabilities of the former maintaining LEA and the former governing body which transfer to the governing body of the grant-maintained school in accordance with section 74 of the Education Reform Act 1988. Schedule 10 to the 1988 Act provides for circumstances where the interests in property are shared between the grant-maintained school and either the local education authority or a third party. The obligations upon the partners in dual-use schemes depend upon the terms of the agreement between the parties.

School Premises

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures he will take to ensure that the management of out-of-hours use of school premises does not discourage investment by third parties in dual-use projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: We are considering urgently the possibility of amending section 42 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 so as to resolve the potential problem to which the hon. Member refers. I have placed a copy in the Library of an official letter from the Department of Education and Science which has just been issued explaining the position.

Universities (Accounts)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many universities registered deficits on their last year's accounts; and will he list them and the sums involved.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Universities' financial years end on 31 July. Accounts for 1989-90 are now being received by the Universities Funding Council which will analyse them early in 1991.

Nursery Provision

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consideration has been given to the reduction of nursery provision for staff in universities and the obligation of institutions of higher education to make provision under the terms of equal opportunities legislation.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This is for university managements to determine.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that computer equipment in universities is replaced at a rate which maintains the credibility of courses.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This is a matter for individual universities, with the assistance of substantial public funds from the computer board for the universities and research councils and from the Universities Funding Council.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to alter the format of community charge bills as proposed by the southern regional council of the Association of District Councils.

Mr. Portillo: Draft regulations are being issued today to charging authorities on the form of the community charge bill for 1991-92. This will enable authorities to amend their computer programmes and arrange their printing requirements so that bills can be sent out in good time when charges have been set in March. A copy of the draft regulations have been placed in the Library. The form of the bill will be on the lines set out in the Department's letter to authorities of 6 November. I believe that this simpler bill will be more easily understood by charge payers.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will undertake a review of the provisions of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 as they relate to (a) local authority finance and (b) political restrictions;

(2) if he has any plans to exempt elderly people being cared for at home by friends or relatives from the poll tax for 1991-92;

(3) if he has any plans to exempt non-working partners from the poll tax for 1991-92;

(4) if he has any plans to end the 20 per cent. contribution rule applying to all poll tax payers whatever their income for 1991-92;

(5) if he has any plans to exempt (a) students and (b) student nurses from the poll tax for 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him of 10 December, Official Report, column 263.

Occupational Health Service

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service for employees within his Department, stating (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mr. Heseltine: All civil service departments and agencies have access to the services of the Civil Service Occupational Health Service which employs some 100 fully qualified occupational health professionals—doctors, nurses and hygiene and safety advisers. It operates via a network of regional offices throughout the United Kingdom and also provides on-site medical advice to Departments. My Department has some 7,000 employees.

Gravel Extraction

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the dates and circumstances in the last five years when an application for gravel extraction has been refused by his Department.

Sir George Young: The information requested has been placed in the Library of the House.

Disability

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the initiatives taken by the Government to improve access for people with disabilities in both new and existing buildings of all types and in the built environment generally since the passage of the Disabled Persons Act 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Government have an impressive record over recent years on the promotion of initiatives aimed at improving the accessibility for people with disabilities of buildings and the built environment. As well as initiatives prompted directly by Government Ministers they include initiatives which Government Departments have promoted in co-operation with a range of statutory and voluntary agencies and organisations, both national and local. I shall be placing in the Library a list of initiatives with which my Department and other Government Departments have been directly concerned.

Homelessness

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's estimate of the number of people sleeping on the streets in London.

Mr. Yeo: Having consulted front-line voluntary organisations, my Department estimates that some 2,000 to 3,000 people sleep on the streets in London. A count of persons sleeping rough is to be carried out as part of the 1991 population census.

Planning Applications (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will call in all planning applications made on land and open spaces sold by Liverpool city council to private developers.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to do so. His policy is to be very selective about calling in applications and he is unlikely to intervene on any of those in question unless they raise planning issues of more than local importance.

Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to consult the providers of existing services in Wales and in each county in Wales in respect of alcohol abuse about the most effective use of available cash and resources, both in respect of the £150,000 announced by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales on Drinkwise day in June and generally.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: As a follow-up to Welsh Office circular 8/89; WHC89(14) on alcohol misuse, the Welsh Office wrote to interested organisations on 10 October 1990 inviting their views on how the £150,000 earmarked for 1990-91 might be utilised to best meet their needs. Responses received were fully taken into account in drawing up the guidance issued in WHC(90)78 and WHC(90)79.

Treatment Centres Initiative

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money was set aside in his Department's budget for the treatment centres initiative in 1989-90 and 1990-91; how much was spent in 1989-90; and how much was spent in each quarter of the 1990-91 financial year to date.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Funding for treatment centres is not allocated or released on a quarterly basis. The annual cost of each centre is considered in advance with the relevant health authority and is the subject of a contractual agreement. A total of £508,500 was released in 1989-90 to meet the initial cost of the setting up of the three all-Wales centres. A total of some £1·2 million has been allocated to fund treatment centres in 1990-91 of which some £598,000 has been released.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales against what criteria he intends to judge the success or failure of his Department's treatment centres initiative.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Among other factors, the evaluation of the treatment centre initiative will consider the extent to which each centre has met its contractual target on throughput and established an all-Wales referral pattern thus reducing the time patients might otherwise have to wait for treatment.

Private Rented Sector

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will undertake an investigation into the difficulties faced by tenants in the private rented sector, particularly in regard to the most vulnerable people in Welsh society.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Recent legislation has strengthened the law against harassment and illegal eviction. Local authorities are encouraged to make full use of their wide powers to control houses in multiple occupation.

Leybucht Bay

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he now proposes to have with his German opposite number regarding their joint approach to the case of the European Commission v. the German Government before the European Court of Justice regarding Leybucht bay, subsequent to the Advocate-General's opinion.

Mr. David Hunt: Until we have received the Advocate-General's opinion and considered its contents I am unable to say whether discussions by the United Kingdom Government will be necessary.

National Library

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer on 10 December, if he will indicate which aspects of the staff inspection report into the national library of Wales were satisfactory and which were not.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Staff inspection reports are internal management documents and the normal procedures for dealing with them were indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Torfaen (Mr. Murphy) on 31 October. The consultation procedure is in progress and no decisions have been made on any of the recommendations.

School Meals and Milk

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what change has taken place, in real terms, in actual expenditure on education in Wales since 1979-80 (a) excluding school meals and milk and (b) including school meals and milk; and what percentage per annum each change represents.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I shall write to the right hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Paul and Wayne Darvell

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to publish the report of the Devon and Cornwall police into the conviction of Paul and Wayne Darvell; and what further action he proposes in the light of the report's conclusions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. It is not the practice to publish the reports of police investigations. The report was received at the end of November. We will consider it and the representations we have received about the case in order to decide whether to intervene.

Open Prisons

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners absconded from open prisons in 1987;

(2) how many prisoners absconded from open prisons in 1988;

(3) how many prisoners absconded from open prisons in 1989;

(4) how many prisoners who absconded from open prisons in 1987 were recaptured;

(5) how many prisoners who absconded from open prisons in 1988 were recaptured;

(6) how many prisoners who absconded from open prisons in 1989 were recaptured;

(7) how many abscondees from open prisons in 1987 were on drug-related offences;

(8) how many abscondees from open prisons in 1988 were on drug-related offences;

(9) how many abscondees from open prisons in 1989 were on drug-related offences.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information on absconds during 1987 and the first five months of 1988 was not recorded in such a way as to enable absconds from open prisons to be distinguished from those who go missing from outside working parties of closed prisons or who abscond while allowed out of closed prisons on trust.

A new method of recording information was introduced in June 1988; from that date until December 1988, a total of 311 inmates absconded from open prisons. During 1989 a total of 682 inmates absconded from open prisons.

The information requested about recapture and the offences for which the inmates concerned had been imprisoned is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Subliminal Communications

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the policy of his Department towards the use of subliminal techniques in all types of communication media; and what estimate he has made of any possible dangers to the public from exposure to subliminal techniques.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government oppose the use of subliminal techniques in broadcasting. Because of the danger of unacceptable exploitation of the public, they have been prohibited for many years and will remain so.

Notifiable Offences

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of notifiable offences for each uniformed member of the police establishment in each police authority in England and Wales for each year from 1986 to 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 11 December 1990]: The information requested is given in the table.

Missing Persons

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on the computerised national register of missing persons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 11 December 1990]: Consideration is at present being given to the establishment of a small co-ordinating bureau which will handle inquiries about missing persons from the public and the media. In the longer term, plans for the new police national computer will greatly assist the follow-up to such inquiries, but this is unlikely to be fully effective until 1992.

Registrars (Information)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information, other than statistical information, he requires from registrars of births, deaths and marriages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

We do not directly require any information from registrars of births, deaths and marriages. Registrars, by law, are required to send copies to the Registrar-General of all register entries made in the area for which they are responsible. The form of these register entries is prescribed by regulations made by the Registrar-General which require my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's approval. In addition, the information contained in each birth, stillbirth and death register is also required to be returned to the prescribed medical officer of the district health authority for the place in which the event occurred under the provisions of the National Health Service Act 1977.

HEALTH

St. George's Hospital, Tooting

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been treated for major heart surgery at St. George's hospital, Tooting, in the period January to November 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to Dr. Enid Vincent, the chairman of the Wandsworth district health authority, who may be able to provide this information.

Elderly People's Homes (Nottinghamshire)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance in respect of elderly people's homes his Department will be giving to Nottinghamshire county council arising from the visit of Councillor Joan Taylor to the Minister on 11 December.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Decisions on the use of resources available to social services authorities are a matter for local determination.

It was announced this week that Nottinghamshire is being given on annual capital guideline for personal social services of £2·03 million for 1991-92, which represents an increase of £0·514 million, or 34 per cent., over 1990-91. Nottinghamshire will also receive an increase of 25·6 per cent. in its personal social services standard spending assessment to £87·6 million for 1991-92.

Haemophiliacs (Aids)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many haemophiliacs,who contracted the AIDS virus through blood transfusions, have died since 1986.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since the beginning of 1986 up to the end of November 1990, the number of deaths of haemophiliacs with the AIDS virus reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre and the communicable diseases (Scotland) unit has been 140. Haemophiliacs contracted the AIDS virus through contaminated blood products and not blood transfusions.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Departmental Budget

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the annual level of his Department's budget on (i) supplementary benefit/income support, (ii) housing benefit and (iii) other means-tested benefits for each year since 1979, both at current and 1990 prices.

Note:

From 1990-91, central government support for rent rebate appears in the DOE and Welsh Office programmes, as rent rebate subsidy in England and Wales will be paid from local authorities housing revenue accounts.

The amounts for 1990-91 are:—

Rent rebates (England) £2,238 million.

Rent rebates (Wales) £158 million.

Diets

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he has received any communication from either of the authors of the report cited in the replies to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 23 June 1989, Official Report, columns 278-79 and 8 December 1989, Official Report, column 420, on the cost of diets for people with AIDS or HIV infection; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has received any further advice on the cost of diets for people with AIDS or HIV infection further to those cited in the reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe of 2 April, Official Report, column 491, and if he will make a further statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I am not aware of any communications from either of the authors referred to. The advice we have received on diets for people with AIDS or HIV infection remains unchanged.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish his comments on the Social Security Advisory Committee's report on the draft regulations on housing benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: The report of the Social Security Advisory Committee on the draft Housing Benefit (General) Amendment No. 3 Regulations 1990 has been received and its contents are currently under consideration. The report and the Government's response will be published in the usual way when the regulations are laid.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families with children in receipt of housing benefit are also receiving family credit, broken down into couples and lone parents.

Miss Widdecombe: Excluding community charge rebate cases in Scotland, at 31 May 1989 there were an estimated 38,000 couples and 22,000 lone parents receiving both housing benefit and family credit.

Lone Parents

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents living on income support have earnings, broken down between those with children aged under 11 years and those with children aged 11 to 15 years.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the form requested. The number of lone parents who are receiving income support and have earnings, broken down by reference to the age of the youngest child is as follows:

	Number
Under 11	59,000
Age 11-15	19,000
Age 16 and over	4,000
Total	82,000

Source: 1989 Annual Statistical Inquiry.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents living on income support have help with their mortgage interest payments; and what the average value of such help is for each lone parent family.

Miss Widdecombe: There are some 68,000 lone parents receiving income support which includes help with mortgage interest payments. The average weekly amount for mortgage interest taken into account in the assessment of income support is £30·45.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the criteria under which pensioners qualify for a severe weather payment; and how many such payments were made in each of the past five years.

Mr. Scott: A payment of £5 is available from the social fund for any period of seven consecutive days when the average temperature is 0 deg or below. Pensioners who receive income support are eligible to claim, and savings over £1,000 are taken into account on a pound-for-pound basis.

Information on the number of payments made to pensioners over the past five years is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the places at which temperatures are measured in order to determine whether cold weather payments should be made available; and if he will state in each case the area relating to these trigger points for this purpose.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the schedule to the Social Fund Cold Weather Payments General (Amendment) Regulations 1990 (SI 2302/1990), which were laid before the House on 21 November and came into force on 12 December. These regulations list all the national climatological message weather stations which act as trigger points, and state which areas are linked to each message station.

Departmental Appointees

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the annual cost of fees and reimbursements to people appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies by his Department.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 December 1990]: People appointed to (a) public, (b) non-governmental and (c) other bodies were paid the following fees and reimbursements during the 1989-90 financial year:

	Fees £	Re-imbursements £
(a)	4,869,069	1,028,190
(b)	—	3,200
(c)	—	16,522

Note: In addition to the above, salaries of £768,181 were paid to appointees of public bodies and £14,501 in salaries to appointees of other bodies.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of enabling people who qualify for the lower rate of mobility component of the disability living allowance before the age of 65 years to receive the higher rate if their mobility needs increase after that age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 6 December 1990]: The extent to which those qualifying for the lower rate of the mobility component would be likely to become entitled to the higher rate after reaching age 65 cannot be predicted with certainty. It is estimated, however, that the eventual cost would be in the order of up to £20 million a year.

TRANSPORT

Express 158s

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the railway inspectorate has made an assessment of the effectiveness of automatic couplings on the express 158s.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that the deputy chief inspecting officer inspected a class 158 unit before these vehicles entered service in Scotland, and that the automatic couplings fitted to class 158 units are fitted to other BR trains on which they have been operating without difficulty. The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate will await the outcome of BR's internal inquiry into the recent incidents in which class 158 units have become uncoupled in service before deciding whether any action on its part is required.

Aston Expressway Sliproads

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he expects work on repairs to the sliproads between Tyburn road and the Aston expressway, Birmingham, to start; whether he will detail the way in which repairs are to be undertaken; how long they are contracted to take; which company is to carry them out; what is the value of the contract; and whether it includes a bonus clause for early completion or a penalty clause for late completion.

Mr. Chope: Advance works have already begun and demolition work is due to start before Christmas. The slip roads should be reopened in the summer.

The damaged structure will be demolished first followed by repairs to the approach spans and columns and finally reconstruction of the main deck. A number of contracts will be let for which tendering procedures are on-going. They will not include a bonus clause for early completion because the unusual nature of the work makes one inappropriate, but they will include a liquidated damages clause for late completion. The contracts will specify very tight programmes.

NORTHERN IRELAND

R-plate Scheme

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research he has commissioned to assess the effectiveness of the R-plate scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is assessing a recent proposal from an academic institution for research into the comparative experience of newly qualified drivers in Great Britain where there is no R-plate system and Northern Ireland. A decision will be taken shortly.

Homelessness

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated number of homeless persons in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is not available prior to April 1989 when the Northern Ireland Housing Executive was given responsibility for dealing with the accommodation needs of all homeless people under the Housing (NI) Order 1988.

I am advised by the chairman of the Housing Executive that the number of applicants accepted as being either homeless or threatened with homelessness since 1 April 1989 is as follows:

	Number
1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990	5,001
1 April 1990 to 30 September 1990	3,534

Hazelbank Park

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will take steps to have Hazelbank park on the northern side of Belfast lough declared an area of outstanding natural beauty and an area of special control.

Mr. Needham: No. The area is already shown in the Belfast urban area plan 2001 as lands reserved for landscape amenity or recreation use.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Romania

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all visits of Government Ministers and officials to Romania since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following Government Ministers and senior officials have visited Romania since 1979:

	Minister or official
1979
13–15 February	Sir Reginald Hibbert, Deputy Under-Secretary, Foreign and Commonwealth Office.
1980
12–14 March	Lord Carrington, Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.
13–17 October	Mr. Cecil Parkinson, Secretary of State for Trade.
1981	None
1982
12–14 January	Sir Antony Acland, Permanent Under-Secretary of State Designate at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.
29 September–3 October	Mr. Malcolm Rifkind, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.
1983	None
3–6 April	Mr. Peter Corley, Under-Secretary of State at the Department of Trade and Industry (as Chairman of the Romanian-British Joint Commission).
8–12 September	Delegation of the Royal College of Defence Studies, led by Air Vice Marshal B. H. Newton.
16–21 September	Major-General C. N. Thompson, Director of the Military Survey.
15–16 October	Admiral Sir John Fieldhouse, First Sea Lord.
1985
8–10 February	Sir Geoffrey Howe, Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.
14–18 June	Sir John Burgh, Director General of the British Council.
21–23 October	Mr. Derek Thomas, Political Director of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.
1986
21–25 April	Mr. Alistair Hunter, Assistant Under-Secretary of State at the Department of Trade and Industry (leading United Kingdom delegation to the 13th Session of United Kingdom-Romania Joint Commission on Economic and Technical Collaboration).

	Minister or official
21–23 May	Mr. Timothy Renton, Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office.
1987
1–3 November	Sir Patrick Wright, Permanent Under-Secretary, Foreign and Commonwealth Office.
1988
7–10 March	Mr. David Ratford, Assistant Under-Secretary, Foreign and Commonwealth Office.
15–19 April	Mr. Alan Clark, Minister for Trade, Department of Trade and Industry.
14–17 October	Sir Mark Russell, Chief Clerk, Foreign and Commonwealth Office.
1989	None
1990
15–16 January	Mr. William Waldegrave, Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office.
27 February—1 March	Mr. John Redwood, Minister for Corporate Affairs, Department of Trade and Industry.
27–28 September	Sir David Orr, Chairman, British Council.
7–11 October	Sir Reginald Doyle, Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Fire Services.

A number of more junior officials, primarily from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, also paid duty visits to Romania in this period.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what current measures there are to help the process of economic and political reform in Romania;

(2) if he will list all offers of aid made by Her Majesty's Government to Romania in each year since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No offers of aid were made by Her Majesty's Government to Romania between 1979 and December 1989. Since then we have sent humanitarian aid, bilaterally and through the European Community, totalling some £6·5 million. We have spent or are spending about £190,000 on measures to promote political and economic reform in Romania. We shall also be responsible for a proportion of the cost of an EC programme to aid Romanian children's homes, which has already committed over £9 million. I am arranging for full details to be placed in the Library of the House.

Bulgaria

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will assist Bulgaria with urgent medical aid.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are contributing to the European Community's recently approved mother and child health care programme for Bulgaria. Additional requests received during the EC-Bulgaria joint commission on 30 November are now being considered, and will be discussed at the 14 to 15 December European Council.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made by the Government encouraging the European Commission to consider Bulgarian requests for food assistance.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Bulgarian requests for food assistance were discussed during the meeting of the EC-Bulgaria joint commission in Sofia on 30 November, and will next be discussed at the 14 to 15 December European Council. We have made it clear that we would support such assistance.

USSR

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the arrangements which will be made for the dispatch of food and medical aid to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; how much will be involved; who will undertake the distribution; and what advice he is giving to members of the public keen to help.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have not yet taken a decision on the provision of food or medical aid to the Soviet Union. We will be discussing the matter with our European partners at this week's European Council. We believe it is important to tackle the underlying problems of distribution and, with British companies, are making specific efforts to this end. Members of the public who wish to help may send parcels to the Soviet embassy at 18 Kensington Palace gardens, London W8 4QX, or make out a cheque to "Aid to the Soviet People", account No. 00107301, held at Barclays bank, Marble Arch branch. The first consignment of parcels was dispatched from Stansted airport on 12 December.

Bishop Laslo Tokes

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the infringements of the human rights of the Romanian bishop, Laslo Tokes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received no representations about Pastor Tokes. We are investigating allegations about infringements of his human rights. I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

A1

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to reply to the letter sent to his predecessor, the right hon. and learned Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind), on 19 September, by the hon. Member for East Lothian about Government policy on the A1 road.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I intend to write to the hon. Member very shortly.

Scottish Prison Service

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to resolve the dispute between the Scottish prison service and the Scottish Prison Officers Association.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am concerned to ensure that the industrial action threatened by the Scottish Prison Officers Association is avoided if at all possible. Such action can result only in an adverse effect on both members of staff and the service as a whole.

Discussions on the issues involved have been under way for some time now between prison service management and the trade union side, which includes the association, and further meetings are being held before Christmas. I am kept fully abreast of developments.

Gaelic Broadcasting Committee

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is now in a position to name the membership of the Gaelic Broadcasting Committee.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. The terms of the Broadcasting Act 1990 place responsibility for appointing the membership of the Gaelic Television Committee on the Independent Television Commission.

Sea Transport (Subsidy)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for shipping subsidies for sea transport services in Scotland in 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Subject to parliamentary approval of the estimates I propose to make available in 1991-92 total subsidy provision of £12·9 million compared with £11·7 million in 1990-91. The deficit subsidy for Caledonian MacBrayne will be £5·8 million. Tariff rebates subsidies of up to £5·5 million will be available for P and O services to Orkney and Shetland; and of £1·6 million for coastal shippers.

The total of subsidies available will maintain support in real terms. This reflects the Government's continuing commitment to assisting the essential sea transport services to the western and northern isles.

DEFENCE

Collins Printers

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work has been undertaken by Collins, printers (Glasgow) for his Department within the past 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMSO, which acts on behalf of the Ministry of Defence in placing printing work, has not placed any work with Harper Collins, Printers (Glasgow) during the past 12 months for the Ministry of Defence.

Conscription

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what administrative arrangements have been made in the event of reintroduction of conscription in anticipation of military escalation in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. We have no plans to reintroduce conscription.

Occupational Health Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements exist for the provision of an occupational health service for employees within his Department, stating (a) how many staff are employed to provide occupational health services, (b) how many of those staff are qualified nurses and (c) how many employees work in his Department in total.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: All civil service departmental and agencies have access to the Civil Service Occupational Health Service, which employs some 100 fully qualified occupational health professionals. Separate to this, the Surgeon General is responsible for routine occupational health care for all civilians and the referral of casework for the industrial grades, in service establishments. The Ministry of Defence employs 116 civilian medical practitioners and 327 civilian nurses, for the occupational health care of civilian and service personnel. At 31 October 1990, the Ministry of Defence employed 302,454 service personnel, 90,048 non-industrial and 50,289 industrial civil servants.

Occupational health provision for service personnel is included as part of the full primary and secondary care they receive within their conditions of service.

Tactical Air-to-surface Missiles

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the NATO policy on the permanent basing of NATO tactical air-to-surface missiles on the European mainland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO's policy remains as set out in the July 1990 London declaration, where it is stated that, to keep the peace, the alliance must maintain for the foreseeable future an appropriate mix of nuclear and conventional forces, based in Europe, and kept up to date where necessary.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the maintenance of the projected number of Trident submarines, launch tubes and missile warheads for so long as other states possess, or are seeking to acquire, a nuclear weapons capability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As my right hon. Friend made clear in his statement on "Options for Change" on 25 July, we shall retain our strategic deterrent with a four-boat Trident force.

Privatisations

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the privatisations with which his Department has been involved since 1979, indicating in each case the date of the sale, the proceeds of the sale and the estimated current value of the company.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The only privatisation my Department has undertaken since 1979 was the sale of Royal Ordnance plc, following an open competition, to British Aerospace plc in April 1987. The net proceeds from the sale were £185 million.

My Department has no means of estimating the current market value of the company, since its shares are not publicly quoted and its assets are not separately identified in the accounts of its parent company.

32 Base Workshop, Bicester

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future at 32 base workshop, Bicester.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A wide-ranging review of the Army's base repair organisation is under way. Consultants have provided early advice specific to the future of 32 base workshop, Bicester. They assess that the facilities and capacity there are surplus to the requirements of the base repair organisation and recommend that the workshop should close as soon as possible. We are consulting the trade unions on this recommendation in accordance with agreed procedures.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from service personnel concerning nuclear safety.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 7 December 1990]: We have received no formal representations from service personnel on this matter.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Lord President of the Council what estimate has been made of the cost of the most expensive parliamentary answers; and what guidelines are used by Government Departments in assessing whether it is too expensive to reply to a parliamentary question.

Mr. MacGregor: Records of the actual cost of the most expensive parliamentary answers are not kept centrally. It is, however, estimated that some 1 to 2 per cent. of all parliamentary questions are likely to exceed the disproportionate cost threshold (currently £250). Any questions thought likely to fall into in this category are drawn to the attention of the relevant Ministers for decision before any significant expenditure is incurred. It is for the Minister to decide whether to decline to answer on the grounds of disproportionate cost or whether it is in the public interest for a full or partial reply to be given.

Official Report

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Lord President of the Council if, pursuant to his answer of 12 December concerning the availability of the Official Report on compact disc, he will take steps to ensure that following its commencement in that form a copy on compact disc will be available from the Vote Office to those hon. Members who request it.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall invite the relevant authorities of the House to consider the implications of making a CD Rom version of the Official Report available from the Vote Office.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the numbers of people on employment training in Chatham and Sunderland at 30 March, and in Avon, Chatham and Sunderland at 30 September 1989 and the numbers that have not had a place on a training scheme or found employment on leaving employment training in the areas and at the dates stated above.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested for Avon and Sunderland is given in the table. Information for Chatham is not available.

Employment Training

	Avon	Sunderland
In training at 30 March 1990	—	3,400
Leavers July 1989—March 1990 not in work or on a course or further education after 3 months	49%	66%
In training at 30 September 1989	2,700	3,400
Leavers July 1989—September 1989 not in work or on a course or further education after 3 months	49%	64%

Trade Unions

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what reasons have been given for failure to submit AR21 returns to the trade union certification officer, by those trade unions which have so failed to submit them; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many trade unions have failed to submit their AR21s by 1 June 1990 to the certification officer for trade unions and employer associations as required by the Trade Union and Labour Relations Act 1974; and if he will list them.

Mr. Forth: Monitoring trade unions' compliance with the provisions of the Trade Union and Labour Relations Act 1974 as regards the submission of annual returns is a matter for the certification officer, an independent statutory authority. I have referred the questions to the certification officer who will be replying shortly.

Privatisations

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the privatisations with which his Department has been involved since 1979, indicating in each case the date of the sale, the proceeds of the sale and the estimated current value of the company.

Mr. Jackson: Professional and Executive Recruitment (PER) was privatised in September 1988. The net proceeds of the sale were £5·1 million. It is now a privately owned company and it is not possible, nor appropriate, for my Department to estimate the current value of the company.

The other privatisation in which my Department has been involved is that of the Skills Training Agency (STA). Some of STA's property interests are still on the market so it is not yet possible to state the final proceeds of the sale.

Science Parks

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much of the available EEC money for science park development has been taken up by universities and polytechnics in this country and other agencies.

Mr. Jackson: The Department of Employment is responsible for the European social fund, which provides money to support the running costs of vocational training schemes and employment measures.

Information about ESF projects in science parks is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Hotels

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any proposals to extend the provisions of the Hotel Proprietors Act 1956 relating to loss of or damage to a guest's property to all places which offer accommodation to paying guests.

Mr. Forth: There are no such plans.

ENERGY

Privatisations

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the privatisations with which his Department has been involved since 1979, indicating in each case the date of the sale, the proceeds of the sale and the estimated current value of the company.

Mr. Wakeham: The privatisations with which my Department has been involved since 1979 are as follows:

	Date of Sale	Net Equity Proceeds to Government (£ million)	Current Market Value[1] (£ million)
Britoil[2]	1982	536
(Secondary sale)[3]	1985	426
Enterprise Oil	1984	382	2,786
Wytch Farm[3]	1984	149
British Gas	1986	5,143	10,120
Regional Electricity Companies	1990	[4]5,182	[5]6,221

[1] At Friday 7th December 1990—Source: Financial Times.
[2] Now a wholly owned subsidiary of British Petroleum.
[3] Now owned by a consortium of companies.
[4] Gross equity proceeds.
[5] Market value at Wednesday 12th December—Source: Financial Times.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Newspapers (Registration)

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advantages accrue to a publication which is registered at the Post Office as a newspaper; who controls registration; and what criteria have to be fulfilled to achieve registration.

Mr. Leigh: Operational matters of this kind fall within the responsibility of the Post Office. However, I understand that publishers of any publication registered at the Post Office as a newspaper may send newspapers by first-class mail at the second-class postage rate. Registration, which costs £6 per annum, is carried out by the Royal Mail's district offices. The principal criteria for registration are that not less than one third of the publication consists of news or current topics or articles relating thereto; the publication is published at intervals of not more than seven days and is printed and published in the United Kingdom, the Isle of Man, the Channel Islands, the Commonwealth, or the EC; and that it has the full title and date printed prominently on the first page.

Postal Services

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration of the draft proposals from the European Commission on postal services has taken place (a) by United Kingdom Ministers, and (b) in the United Kingdom Parliament.

Mr. Leigh: The European Commission has not yet published its draft proposals on postal services, and does not expect to do so until next year. United Kingdom Ministers and officials have, however, played, and will continue to play, an active part in the appropriate EC fora in the development of proposals for the Commission's Green Paper.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what future discussions will take place on proposals from the European Community on postal services.

Mr. Leigh: The European Commission expects to publish its Green Paper on postal services in the new year. This will be followed by a period for consultation during which all interested parties will be encouraged to express their views.

Environment Conferences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has received an invitation to participate in the conference on environmental agenda for management development to be held at Brunel university on 10 December.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 10 December 1990]: Yes. The conference organisers contacted my Department, and I am glad to say that we were represented at it.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service Pensions Scheme

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received advocating the extension of payment of civil service widows' pensions to the widows of post-retirement marriages with civil servants who retired before April 1978.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Since my hon. Friend, the former Paymaster General, replied to a similar question from my hon. Friend on 15 October this year, at column 716, the civil service unions have submitted a claim for improvements in the provision made by the civil service pension scheme for the widows of post-retirement marriages.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will reconsider his decision not to amend the civil service pension scheme to provide for the payment of pensions to the widows of post-retirement marriages whose husbands retired before 6 April 1978.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government have no plans to extend the present arrangements so that account is taken of pensionable service before 6 April 1978.

North Sea Oil Revenue

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total income to the Exchequer from North Sea oil revenue (a) between 1974 and 1979 and (b) since 1979.

Mr. Maples: Total tax revenues from North sea oil production in the financial years from 1973-74 to 1978-79 amounted to £944 million and from 1979-80 to 1990-91 are forecast at £70,200 million.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest balance of payments figures (a) including and (b) excluding trade in oil.

Mr. Mellor: The information is available in table A1 of the monthly review of external trade statistics, available in the Library of the House, or on the Central Statistical Office database, which may also be accessed through the Library.

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The ECOFIN Council met in Brussels on 10 December. I represented the United Kingdom.

Discussion focused on the economic situation in the Soviet Union and eastern Europe, and the response that the Community might make towards assisting their progress towards developing market economies and appropriate adjustment programmes. There was discussion of the possible methods of providing such assistance to the Soviet Union, in particular technical assistance, and the most appropriate Community response to the problems of food distribution, as preparation for the European Council.

The Council also discussed the question of G24 financial assistance for the countries of eastern Europe. It agreed that it was important that any such assistance should be in support of IMF programmes with appropriate conditionality and that contributions should be obtained from countries outside the EC.

It was agreed that a proposal to disburse the second tranche of the $1 billion medium-term loan to Hungary, agreed earlier this year, should be referred to the 17 December ECOFIN Council for decision.

Employee Share Ownership

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Inland Revenue will comment on draft employee share ownership trust deeds submitted to it.

Mr. Maude: My predecessor announced in May the introduction of an arrangement under which the Inland Revenue is willing to examine executed employee share ownership trust deeds and to inform the trustees whether in its view the trust meets the qualifying conditions of schedule 5 to the Finance Act 1989. I have now authorised the Inland Revenue also, in the context of its responsibilities for administration of the law relating to employee share ownership schemes, to examine and comment on draft trust deeds submitted to it, so as to assist those seeking to establish qualifying ESOP trusts.

Income Tax

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the rates of personal income tax would need to be increased if (a) education, (b) education, fire and police and (c) the whole of the community charge, less expenditure on social services and housing, were transferred to income tax; and if he will also show the estimated savings on community charge benefit in each case.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 December 1990]: The implications for personal income tax and for community charge benefit costs of transferring local authority functions to central Government would depend entirely on the extent to which there was a reduction in the grant paid to local authorities.

Debt Relief

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the likely debt relief gained by the least-developed countries eligible for assistance under the Chancellor's Trinidad terms.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 12 December 1990]: If all bilateral official creditors were to cancel two thirds of the stock of debt owed by the 19 countries that have previously benefited from Toronto terms this would reduce the total stock of debt owed by these countries by about $18 billion.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the incidence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in the Republic of Ireland; and what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of monitoring and control procedures of Irish beef imports into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: There have been 26 confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in the Republic of Ireland out of a total cattle population of over 7 million. The scientific veterinary committee of the European Community considered the question of trade from countries that have a low incidence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy and concluded that no further measures are necessary in addition to the current animal and public health rules.

Organic Farming

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what level of support his Department currently offers for organic farming; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Farmers engaged in organic farming qualify for the support given to all farmers under the set-aside and pilot extensification schemes, the farm and conservation grant scheme and the nitrate sensitive areas schemes. Support under these arrangements can be used to assist farmers in converting to organic agriculture. Further support is available in the form of advice from the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service. This Department also provides grant aid amounting to £60,000 per annum to the United Kingdom register of organic food standards that is establishing standards and will be responsible for their enforcement in the United Kingdom.

The Department also supports research directly related to organic farming and we intend in 1991 to increase our funding for such research to about £500,000 per annum. In addition, other research into aspects of conventional farming relevant to organic production amounted to £892,000 last year. We have commissioned a study of the economics of the production and marketing of organically grown farm produce in Great Britain and a full report is expected to be published in spring 1991.

Lastly, my right hon. Friend the Minister announced earlier this year that he intended to issue a consultation document outlining a five-year scheme giving aid to those wishing to convert from conventional or organic production within the framework of the EC extensification rules. The Commission subsequently indicated that the proposed scheme was not consistent with the existing EC rules, but its recent proposals on agriculture and the environment may provide the means by which a scheme could be introduced.

This is a considerable package of support for organic agriculture and I hope that it can help British farmers to play a more prominent part in the small but growing market for organic produce.

Price Stabilisers

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects a decision on whether stabilisers will be triggered following the 1990 harvest.

Mr. Curry: Stabilisers have triggered price cuts for rapeseed (minus 15·5 per cent.), sunflower seed (minus 21 per cent.), soya (minus 30 per cent.), and peas and beans (minus 20·02 per cent.) following the 1990 harvest. A decision on the cereals stabiliser is due to be reached in February.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 5 December, Official Report, column 141, what is the acreage of land set aside in the United Kingdom in each year since the set-aside programme started; and what is his estimate of the reduction of cereals and meat in tonnage and value in real and in 1990 prices.

Mr. Curry: In 1988 and 1989 respectively, approximately 52,000 and 49,000 hectares of land were entered into set-aside in the United Kingdom. A total of 1,990 entrants have applied to enter approximately 31,000 hectares into the scheme. I will be in a position to assess the effects on production when I have the results of an evaluation commissioned by the Department from Reading university.

Drift Nets

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the proposed amendment to the EC regulation 3094/86 to restrict the use of drift nets to prevent fishing of tuna and billfish and limit net lengths to less than 2·5 km on boats registered in EC member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The United Kingdom fully supported the United Nations resolution to curtail or ban the use of large-scale pelagic drift net fishing on the high seas. We are currently examining carefully the Commission's proposal, made available to member states on 10 December, although not in final form, which would limit the use of any drift nets to 2·5 km per boat whatever the target species. It should be noted that very few United Kingdom vessels use drift nets with an aggregate length of more than 2·5 km.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 182

SESSION 1990–91

3rd December—14th December, 1991

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
